State, strikers resume talks

HARRISBURG (UPI) — Pennsylvania officials and representatives of the striking social workers union resumed what was billed as "informal talks" Wednesday in a bid to end the 16-day walkout.

The five-hour session was held in the Capitol offices of Lt. Gov. Ernest Kline. Both sides refused to comment in detail on the meeting.

"There was an informal discussion of the issues that separate us," said state negotiator Christ Zervanos. "It was a good discussion, but nothing conclusive was done. Each side has a better picture now of what separates us."

Present at the meeting were Kline, Zervanos, Philip Kalodner who is an aide to Gov. Milton J. Shapp, and representatives of the Pennsylvania Social Services Union and the Pennsylvania Employment Security Employees Association.

Richard Murphy, a national PSSU official, also attended.

The 12,000-member union walked off the job July 1 and last weekend rejected a state offer of an 11 per cent pay hike over the next two years. The unions are seeking an immediate six per cent hike.

Zervanos and Kim Fellner, a union spokesperson, said the talks were expected to resume today.

Zervanos said the wage dispute still remains the major roadblock to a settlement. However, he said members of his staff and the union negotiating team met Wednesday night to discuss "technical, non-economic" aspects of the contract.

Fellner said PSSU negotiation Edward Purcell went back to his negotiating team after the meeting in Kline's office to report on progress made during the day.

The strike has halted the flow of unemployment checks in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, although the state Monday lost its bid to get a court injunction ordering the workers back on the job.

The Shapp administration said it was seeking volunteers to staff unemployment offices that were closed by the walkout and is trying to work out an arrangement with banks to provide interest-free loans to the jobless until the strike is settled.

Meanwhile, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees indefinitely postponed its plans to announce the results of statewide voting by its 73,000 members on a wage settlement reached with the state last July 4.

AFSCME officials had scheduled a news conference for Wednesday to announce the results. However, it was canceled without explanation and all union officials were unavailable for comment.

Sources within the union said the proposed pact was being approved by rank-and-file members. However, no details were available on the vote margin.

Prepare for historic rendezvous

Spacemen make key repairs

HOUSTON (UPI) — Three American astronauts and two Russian cosmonauts, improvising key repairs of broken equipment, lined up their spaceships Wednesday for orbital rendezvous over Europe and beamed to earth twin telecasts of life in space.

The astronauts opened a tunnel through which they must pass to shake hands with the Russians after the two ships link up today. The cosmonauts fixed cameras with which they will telecast the historic greeting from inside their craft.

Both crews — part of the "Magnificent Seven" space explorers now in orbit — also found time on the eve of the rendezvous to explore the unique nature of space in the name of science.

Astronauts Thomas Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald "Deke" Slayton fired up a furnace in their Apollo, melting tiny amounts of precious gold in capsules of iron and graphite to see how weightlessness affects surface tension and convection currents.

Cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov, waiting for Apollo to catch up with them at 12:15 p.m. EDT today and lock its nose adapter to their tubular ship, used fungi to study how space travel may disrupt natural biological rhythms.

Another experiment aboard Apollo had an unexpected result. Stafford told Houston control he was trying to unpack a frozen device to test ways of making super-pure drugs when it popped out of his hand and "took off across the spacecraft ... at minus 200 degrees."

"We finally got it captured using old underwear (to handle the super-cold object)," he said. "It's well secured and under control here. It was like a minor snowstorm, but it wasn't bad."

The cosmonauts exchanged spirited greetings and personal chitchat with two other spacemen aboard Russia's Salyut space station, nearing the end of its second month in earth orbit.

Salyut's commander dubbed the earthlings now in space "The Magnificent Seven" after a movie of the same name, one of the few U.S. westerns to meet wide popularity in the Soviet Union.

Counting Salyut, there are seven men in three craft from two nations circling the globe. Only once before — during the 1969 joint flight of Soyuz 6, 7 and 8 — have seven men been in space at the same time.

Both Apollo and Soyuz fired orbit-adjusting bursts of their rockets to get set for a rendezvous and linkup by former arch rivals in the space race, an event that would have been unthinkable only a few short years ago. The firings went without a hitch.

Apollo's 24-second maneuver with four steering rockets added 6 miles per hour to the craft's speed.

Timetable of events for linkup

HOUSTON (UPI) — Timetable of major events today for the Apollo-Soyuz international spaceflight (all times EDT and subject to change):

2:20 a.m.—Cosmonauts awaken.

5:20 a.m.—Astronauts awaken.

7:30 a.m.—Twenty-eight minute telecast of operations in Apollo.

8:54 a.m.—Apollo fires main engine to shift into 115 by 102-mile-high orbit. Soyuz is now 298 miles from Apollo.

9:10 a.m.—Ten-minute telecast of Apollo crew activities.

9:38 a.m.—Apollo uses main engine to move into orbit ranging from 115 to 128 miles high. Soyuz is now 167 miles from Apollo.

10:15 a.m.—Apollo maneuvers into orbit ranging from 126 to 128 miles high.

10:32 a.m.—Ten-minute telecast of Apollo crew activities.

1:14 a.m.—Apollo begins final phase of rendezvous maneuvers, switching into 139 by 128-mile-high orbit. Soyuz is now 24 miles away.

11:46 a.m.—Apollo begins to brake, goes into orbit 138 to 137 miles high. Soyuz is rapidly approaching.

12:15 p.m.—Apollo docks with Soyuz. Both spacecraft are 136 miles high (TV).

1:49 p.m.—Seven-minute Apollo telecast.

2:59 p.m.—Seven-minute telecast from the docking module.

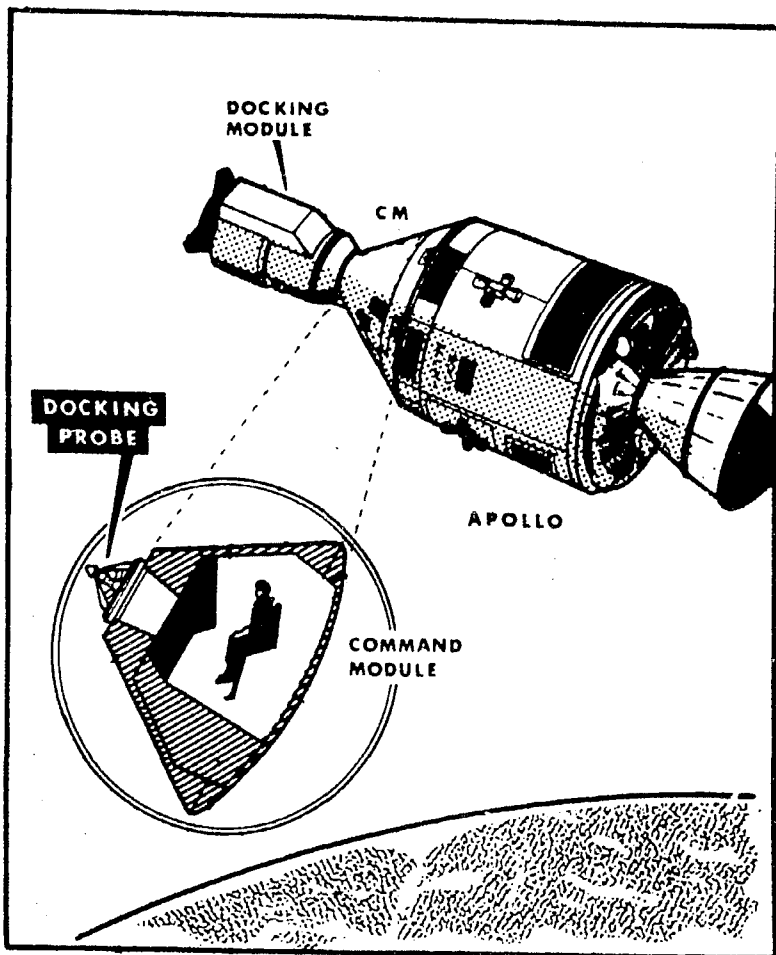

3:17 p.m.—First crew transfer: Stafford and Slayton move from docking module to Soyuz, joining Leonov and Kubasov for initial greetings. Flags and letters are exchanged (TV).

4:14 p.m.—Joint flight certificate is signed in Soyuz, followed by joint meal in Soviet spacecraft.

5 p.m.—Five-minute telecast from docking module followed by nine-minute telecast at 5:14 p.m.

5:31 p.m.—Stafford leaves Soyuz, preceded by Slayton.

7:20 p.m.—Astronauts begin eight-hour sleep period; cosmonauts begin 7½ hour sleep period.

APOLLO REPAIRS — The Apollo astronauts, whose flight is going well with only minor problems, followed a special procedure Wednesday to remove a mechanical device which they could not get out of the docking tunnel earlier because of some wires which had moved out of position. They followed the instructions successfully. The diagram shows the relation of the docking probe to the Apollo spacecraft. (UPI)

Russian cosmonauts become TV repairmen

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soyuz cosmonauts repaired a fault in their television transmitting system Wednesday and began sending clear pictures to earth from inside their Soyuz for the first time since blast off early Tuesday.

Working under the direction of ground controllers, the cosmonauts dismantled a panel, unplugged the system, located the fault and repaired it.

"I can see you well," said ground controller Georgi Shonin as the screens flickered to life.

Lt. Col. Alexei A. Leonov and civilian engineer Valeri N. Kubasov got up an hour earlier than scheduled to work on the television.

Originally, controllers thought the fault was confined to a single black and white camera. But the problem appeared to be more general, since the first transmissions were via a color camera.

At the same time, the Apollo astronauts repaired a malfunctioning docking probe and prepared for their scheduled linkup today with the Russian spacecraft high above Germany. It will be the first dual-nation linkup in space. One of the first pictures viewers saw once the television was fixed was Leonov sitting and Kubasov upside down beside him.

"Do we look like the Jack of Diamonds?" Leonov quipped.

In the background could be seen the heavy space suits and helmets of the cosmonauts, who had donned lightweight flight suits.

Leonov said they had been too busy to stow their suits, but added "We shall have plenty of time to clear up to receive guests."

"We are very proud of you because you are doing everything so well," controller Shonin said.

Leonov reported Soyuz had entered the final orbit in which it will wait for Apollo. He said everything is proceeding normally.

Leonov inquired about the Apollo astronauts and asked if they were aware that Soyuz had been having television problems.

"Are they sending a lot of TV broadcasts?" he asked.

"Yes, a lot," Shonin replied.

Shonin told Leonov and Kubasov that the astronauts were "working perfectly with no mistakes."

The mood aboard Soyuz appeared to be relaxed and friendly. The cosmonauts at one stage grumbled good-naturedly because ground control interrupted them during a meal.

Russia buys 2 million tons of wheat from U.S. firm

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Soviet Union has bought 2 million metric tons of American wheat in what officials think may be only the first step of a larger grain deal, the Agriculture Department announced Wednesday.

The department said in a brief statement it was "notified this afternoon by a grain export firm that it completed negotiations today for the sale of two million metric tons (73.4 million bushels) of hard winter wheat to the Soviet Union."

Agriculture secretary Earl L. Butz predicted earlier that the Russians might buy up to 10 million tons of American corn and wheat for the coming year because of a bad year in the Soviet Union and record crops here.

Butz said sales in that range would have only "minimal" impact on American food prices but might brighten the price outlook for farmers.

The announcement said the Soviet purchase from a private firm — which was not named — will not involve any federal subsidy or U.S. government credit. The administration has authority to extend grain credit to Russia, but Butz said last week he has no current plans to do so.

Deputy Assistant Secretary Richard Bell said later the wheat was sold by Cook Industries Inc., of Memphis, Tenn. He said the firm had indicated it had no objection to the disclosure.

The wheat would be worth $294 million at current prices, Bell said. This does not necessarily indicate what the Soviets actually will pay, he said, but is an estimate of the value based on Wednesday's prices for wheat at U.S. Gulf ports.

Bell confirmed that officials expect additional sales.

"We still expect them to buy a total of between five and ten million tons ... We are aware that other (private grain) companies are still negotiating," he said.

The announced sale of 2 million tons of wheat came after several weeks of rumors which grew as Soviet crop prospects dwindled and European sources reported Soviet negotiations.

Energy chief makes prediction

Gas price to rise again

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal energy chief Frank Zarb said Wednesday he expects gasoline prices to rise another two cents a gallon by Labor Day — and then decline a bit — in a continuation of gas pump inflation.

Zarb made his prediction as President Ford and Congress reached a formal showdown on whether and how the nation shall legally restrain the price of oil products.

Ford sent Congress in the late afternoon his proposal for lifting price controls from so called "old domestic oil" — the bulk of what the nation produces. This also could cause additional gasoline price increases.

Even before that proposal reached Capitol Hill Wednesday, however, the Senate followed up its decision to continue "old oil" price controls by approving another bill that would slightly roll back the price of "new oil."

By a vote of 57 to 40, the Senate approved a compromise House-Senate bill which would require Ford to set price ceilings on "new oil" — that produced by wells drilled after 1972 — no higher than $11.28 a barrel.

It also would force Ford to get congressional approval for any increase of more than 50 cents a barrel in the price of "old oil" from wells drilled before 1973.

Republicans bitterly opposed the bill and refused to sign the Senate report. The House was expected to pass it but Ford almost surely will veto the legislation.

The bill runs directly counter to the conservation-by-price-hike philosophy contained in Ford's proposed decontrol bill.

After Zarb testified on Capitol Hill, Federal Energy Administration spokesman Robert Nipp said the energy administrator meant to predict further increases of no more than two cents a gallon rather than a possible five cents he mentioned. Nipp said the five-cent figure would include price hikes that recently took affect.

"What he meant to say was that, legally, prices could go up two to five cents a gallon depending on the individual oil companies' positions, but our assessment of market conditions indicates that the most we'll see gasoline prices go up is two to five cents at the pump including the late June and early July increase," Nipp said.

"In other words, another two cents at most."

Atomic bomb exploded 30 years ago

You've come a long way, Baby

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Thirty years ago Wednesday, a group of little-known scientists exploded the first atomic bomb on the New Mexico desert and ushered in a new era of history.

The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists called the blast "the birth of Big Science." And with it came an age of superstar scientists—men previously obscure who suddenly were thrust into international prominence and towering importance to the country's future.

In the years following the explosion at Alamogordo, N.M., on July 16, 1945, scientists such as Edward Teller and J. Robert Oppenheimer became household names—often involved in controversy.

Nobel Prizes figured in the new era. Six Nobel laureates in the period since World War II worked at the Los Alamos, N.M., laboratory during the war.

"Not only the bomb but radar and other wartime developments" brought new public awareness of scientists, says Nobel-winning physicist Luis Alvarez of the University of California at Berkeley.

He recalls that in earlier years, "If I went to a party, I always said I was a chemist because nobody knew what a physicist did."

Scientists have varying views of what has occurred in the three decades since the blast in New Mexico and the A-bomb explosions that leveled Hiroshima and Nagasaki less than a month later.

The outspoken Teller, often called "the father of the H-bomb" — a label he dislikes — says:

"It is true that scientists have been more in the public eye, but science has not been. I would almost say that the scientists have become more important and science less, and that is a poor bargain."

Teller says he feels the quality of young scientists has "declined catastrophically" because, in part, many young persons do not think science is as relevant as in the past.

"There has been a decline in interest," agrees Hans Mark, director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif.

Says Alvarez: "When you walk into a university bookstore and see books of astrology on prominent display, it gives you food for thought."

"I find it a shocking thing, this interest in astrology."

Woman named assistant to Monroe district attorney

STROUDSBURG — Mrs. Linda Wallach Miller, a Mount Pocono attorney, has been selected as assistant district attorney for Monroe County, replacing Robert C. Lear who will resign effective Aug. 1.

District Attorney James F. Marsh said Wednesday he selected Mrs. Miller from seven area attorneys who were being considered for the $9,000 a year position. She will be the first woman to serve as a district attorney in Monroe County.

Marsh said she has had some criminal court experience and that she will carry about one-third of the county's caseload, with the remainder being assumed by himself and Assistant District Attorney C. Daniel Higgins.

Lear, who has been an assistant district attorney for the past 19 months, said he enjoyed his job and termed it a "tremendous experience." Lear said the work as a district attorney left too little time for his private practice and so he decided to resign.

Mrs. Miller said that although she has not had a lot of criminal experience, she is confident she can handle the job. She said she expects it to be a challenge working in the district attorney's office.

Mrs. Miller is a 1969 graduate of Marywood College in Scranton and received her law degree from Villanova University in 1972.

She was admitted to the Monroe County Bar in October 1972 and began practice with Peter J. O'Brien of Mount Pocono. She became a partner in the O'Brien firm in January of this year.

Mrs. Miller is also admitted to practice before the Pennsylv-

vania Supreme Court and the U.S. Middle District of Pennsylvania.

She and her husband, Edward J. Miller, reside in Tobyhanna.

What's news

Here's a switch!

SOUTHEND, England — Local government officials are touring the seafront bars of this south England holiday resort checking out the topless dancers, and all in the course of duty. Holiday makers complained that the girls, advertised as "topless dancers," had too many clothes on and therefore contravened the trades description laws. Consumer protection officials are visiting the bars to make sure that the customers are getting value for money.

No laughing matter

HARRISBURG — Amid a gaggle of puns, limericks and tall stories, the Pennsylvania House Wednesday passed a bill to outlaw pay toilets. The measure passed 112-78 and was sent to the Senate, which has already defeated an identical measure. While some members found it hard to take the issue seriously — one urged the House to "sit on the matter" — chief sponsor Thomas Flaherty fought all attempts to sidetrack or defeat the bill. "It's greed and greed in a small way to charge for these services," Flaherty said. "This is a confrontation between the people and a lock company, that is not even based in this state, that has been up here lobbying."

More problems for New Jersey

CHERRY HILL, N.J. — A union representing employees at all levels of government in New Jersey began the strike authorization process Wednesday to protest layoffs and salary freezes over budget cuts. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees summoned 300 local leaders and members to a meeting here to take the first of three strike authorization votes. The union, which has 81 local councils throughout the state, also scheduled strike votes today in Trenton and next Monday in Newark.

Personal income sets record

WASHINGTON — Personal income rose a record $2.6 billion last month, the government said Wednesday. The large spurt in income was caused by a one-time dispersal of $50 Social Security payments and by increases in railroad retirement benefits and supplemental security income, the Commerce Department said. These forms of payments added $1.7 billion to the income of Americans in June. Higher wages, rent payments, dividends and business and farm income added another $900 million. An increase in income for consumer spending is necessary to help generate a recovery from the 18-month recession, which most economists believe hit bottom in May or June.

Gurney defense rests case

TAMPA, Fla. — The defense rested Wednesday in the bribery-conspiracy trial of former Florida Sen. Edward Gurney after 86 days of testimony. Chief defense attorney C. Harris Dittmar told the hushed federal courtroom at 3:02 p.m. that "defendant Gurney rests." Attorneys for the three co-defendants in the case, Joseph Bastien, K. Wayne Swiger and Ralph Kountz, then made similar statements in quick succession. U.S. District Judge Ben Krentzman promptly recessed the court until this morning.

House votes to abolish GSA

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania House Wednesday approved a bill to abolish the General State Authority, the controversial legislative agency that handles construction of most state buildings. The measure would combine the GSA and Property and Supplies into a new agency called the Department of General Services. The legislation was approved 117-75 and sent to the Senate over objections of House Republicans, who said it would lead to the same abuses that caused conviction of former Property and Supplies Secretary Frank C. Hilton.

Spy probes stymied

WASHINGTON — A Senate intelligence committee Wednesday failed to reach agreement with the Justice Department and the FBI on getting requested information on alleged FBI improprieties. But the panel held off a direct confrontation until staffs of both sides try to work out a compromise. Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, the committee chairman, told reporters "we did not reach agreement" in a closed meeting with Attorney General Edward Levi and FBI Director Clarence Kelley.

Major overhaul of protection laws

Pa. House passes consumer bills

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Pennsylvania House Wednesday passed six bills designed to give greater protection to consumers who owe money, like to shop for bargains or who buy on credit.

Approval of the six-bill package marked the first time in this decade the legislature has made a major overhaul of all the state's consumer protection laws. However, they still must be approved by the Senate, where more formidable opposition was expected.

One bill repeals the Fair Trade Law and ends the practice whereby retailers agree with the manufacturer not to sell an item below a certain price.

Chief sponsor Rep. Mark Cohen, D-Philadelphia, said repeal of the law would save the average family $50 a year. The House also approved 189-0 a bill to eliminate the ban on "loss leaders," the items retailers sell at greatly reduced prices to attract customers to their stores. However, the ban would still apply to milk and cigarettes.

Perhaps the most important bill approved — as far as the government is concerned — is a measure which would greatly expand the powers of the Consumer Protection Bureau. It was approved 186-7.

Swimmer in Florida attacked by shark

NEW SMYRNA BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — A 14-year-old girl sustained severe lacerations on her left arm when attacked and bitten by a four-foot shark while swimming less than 200 feet off this northeast Florida resort city's downtown beach Tuesday.

Capt. John Crisp, head of the city lifeguard detachment, identified the victim as Beverly White of New Smyrna Beach. She was released after treatment at Fish Memorial hospital for three deep gashes in her left forearm and a number of other less severe lacerations. She also suffered a minor laceration in her side, apparently from the shark's fin, Crisp said.

The girl was in chest deep water, swimming with a companion, Steve Morris, when the shark attacked, Crisp said.

"She yelled to Morris, 'Get me out of the water,'" Crisp said. The youth raced to her side and pulled her out of the ocean and brought her to the life guard station for first aid treatment before being taken to the hospital.

Crisp said the attack occurred at 12:45 p.m. about 120 feet from water's edge along the beach at the ocean end of Flagler Street. He said both the victim and Morris saw the shark. "It was either a lemon shark or a sand shark," Crisp said.

New Jersey totaling up flood damages

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — County Civil Defense officials began collecting damage estimates Wednesday to boost Gov. Brendan T. Byrne's request for federal aid in the wake of widespread storm and flood damage around New Jersey.

State Civil Defense officials said they were preparing preliminary damage estimates from on-site inspections by county engineers and federal disaster officials.

Meanwhile, Thomas R.

Casey, regional director of the federal Disaster Assistance Administration, and acting state Civil Defense Director J. Morgan Van Hise prepared to inspect areas of the worst damage around the state.

Byrne declared a state of emergency in New Jersey Tuesday and asked President Ford for federal assistance to repair damage following more than a week of heavy rain. Byrne named Van Hise to coordinate the disaster clean-up.

A spokesman for the state Civil Defense Division, John McConnell, said county CD coordinators prepared the damage estimates from figures provided by local officials.

McConnell said the division had emergency operation centers at work throughout the state to coordinate clean-up operations, but many local officials reported that receding waters had solved the most urgent problems.

Green Brook Police Chief Robert Lund, CD coordinator in Somerset County said there was no clean-up required at the county level but some municipalities were contracting firms to help clear roadways of debris left from overflowing streams.

"The river levels are way down," Lund said. "If it doesn't rain again we have it licked." Lund said that earlier Tuesday the level of the Raritan and Millstone Rivers, both of which had overflowed their banks, were dropping by four inches each hour.

"We can take quite a bit of rain now," Lund said. "We don't want it but we can take it."

Lund said more than 210 homes were reported damaged in the county and said the damage was not limited to homes near rain-swelled rivers and streams.

In Passaic County a spokeswoman for the county CD coordinator said road crews and county engineers were working to complete damage estimates.

The spokeswoman said engineers also began work on how to clear roadways and clogged storm drains and replace the Goffle Brook Bridge in Hawthorne, which collapsed.

"The engineers are looking to see how they can work on these problems," she said, "but it will be a long hard job."

House against integration of sexes in phys ed class

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Wednesday repeated its stand Wednesday — by a narrow one-vote margin — against integration of the sexes in school and college gym classes.

The action came on an $8 billion aid to education appropriation bill, which passed on a 370 to 42 vote and was sent to the Senate.

The bill would fund grade school, high school and college aid programs for the 15 months that started July 1. It is $1.5 billion over President Ford's budget requests and faces a possible veto.

The House voted 212 to 211 to insist on a provision it wrote into the measure earlier that says the government cannot withhold funds to force sex integration of physical education classes.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has issued regulations that go into effect Monday under which schools and colleges cannot practice sex discrimination in any program if they want to continue getting federal aid.

Rep. Bob Casey, D-Tex., authored the House provision, which the Senate rejected in conference resulting in a compromise money bill. The Senate must now vote to accept or reject the House language and rejection would require another conference to work out the difference.

Rep. James G. O'Hara, D-Mich., chairman of a House education subcommittee that held hearings on HEW's regulations, said the rules would require integration of physical education classes with the exemption of sex education courses and contact sports.

"Unless we insist on the Casey amendment it means that boys and girls or men and women would have to be in the same gym classes," said O'Hara.

Egypt to allow U.N. units to remain in Sinai posts

By United Press International Egyptian government sources in Cairo said Wednesday the 4,000 United Nations' peace-keeping troops in the Sinai will remain at their posts beyond July 24, despite Egypt's announcement it will not agree to extending their mandate.

U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, however, called the situation "serious and dangerous" and said both Egypt and Israel must approve the presence of the troops before the United Nations General could extend the mandate.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said at a Milwaukee news conference that the Egyptian decision "is most unfortunate and that it complicates things."

The Cairo sources said Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi's announcement Tuesday did not mean that Cairo wanted the troops removed from the buffer zone between Israeli and Egyptian troops in the desert seized by Israel in the 1967 war.

They said Fahmi simply wanted to "make a point" that territory relinquished by Israel and taken over by the U.N. troops in Sinai was under full Egyptian jurisdiction.

Fahmi had accused Israel of stalling in peace negotiations and said Egypt would not agree to another extension of the mandate letting the U.N. Emergency Force troops remain in the Sinai unless there is progress toward a Middle East peace.

Waldheim told a news conference at U.N. headquarters in New York that the Middle East situation "would be more dangerous than it is now" should peacekeeping troops be removed from the Sinai but he did not foresee an immediate outbreak of war.

Egypt's actions worry Kissinger

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said Wednesday the United States is "worried" about an Egyptian threat to remove a U.N. peacekeeping force from the Sinai and warned such a move would "complicate enormously" sensitive negotiations in the Middle East.

He told a news conference that Egypt's notification that it will not agree to an extension of the mandate for the peace-keeping force "was most unfortunate."

The mandate, under which the United Nations has overseen a troubled peace between Israel and the Arab nations, expires July 24. Egypt advised U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim Tuesday it will not agree to prolong the mandate.

"We are worried about the intent of the Egyptian letter to the Security Council," Kissinger said.

Removal of U.N. troops from the desert buffer zone between Egypt and Israel "would not necessarily mean an end of all the agreements that have been reached," Kissinger said, "but it would certainly compound an already difficult situation."

"The consequences of the withdrawal of UNEF (the U.N. Emergency Force) from the Sinai Desert would be to complicate enormously the negotiating possibilities and to raise serious doubts about the possibility of such negotiating efforts," he said.

Solzhenitsyn a threat to peace

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said Wednesday Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn's militant views are a threat to peace and he has recommended that President Ford not meet with the exiled writer.

Kissinger said the symbolic effect of a meeting between Ford and Solzhenitsyn could be a disadvantage to the United States government.

"If I understand the message of Solzhenitsyn, it is that the United States should pursue an aggressive policy to overthrow the Soviet system," Kissinger said.

"But I believe that if his views became the national policy of the United States we would be confronted with considerable threat of military conflict...I believe that the consequences of his views would not be acceptable to the American people or to the world."

Kissinger made his remarks at a news conference in Milwaukee one day after Solzhenitsyn told congressmen that America is "complacent in its affluence" and reluctant to understand suffering caused by the Soviet government.

W-gate prosecutor probed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A House criminal justice subcommittee voted late Wednesday to summon Special Prosecutor Henry S. Ruth Jr. for questioning behind closed doors about his Watergate investigation.

The subcommittee approved unanimously by voice vote a motion by Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman, D-N.Y., to call Ruth before Congress starts its August recess.

She said Ruth should be questioned about three areas raised by subcommittee Democrats during the 45-minute meeting:

— To satisfy the public and the subcommittee that the special prosecutor had conducted "a full, complete and thorough" investigation.

— The nature of Ruth's final report, which he said he would submit to Congress in August before his office terminates in September.

— The ultimate disposition of materials in the special prosecutor's office.

Rep. Holtzman told a reporter afterward that the closed meeting with Ruth would not preclude the possibility of open hearings later on the special prosecutor's performance.

She has expressed fears since the third and final Watergate grand jury was dismissed July 3 that Ruth would close up shop with "serious questions" still unanswered. She cited the 18½-minute gap in a White House tape as well as the extent of Richard M. Nixon's Watergate activities.

Ford fights hard for Turkish bases

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford, fighting to retain U.S. bases in Turkey, Wednesday invited 135 congressmen to a breakfast today to discuss lifting a ban on military aid for that NATO nation.

The Turks have given the United States until today to lift the ban or face losing the 26 American bases, including some which house vital electronic listening devices monitoring Soviet military communications.

Deputy Press Secretary William Greener said Ford invited 135 Democrats and Republicans because "the President wants to see as many as he can." He already has wooed many others.

Congress imposed the ban following the Turkish use of U.S. arms during its invasion of Cyprus. At White House urging, the Senate has voted to lift the ban but the House has not.

The House International Affairs Committee has proposed allowing shipment of $185 million in arms which Turkey already had bought before the ban, but which were never delivered. That bill is scheduled for House action next week, with the outcome uncertain.

Crew wasn't paying attention

Plane crash cause found

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Transportation Safety Board reported Wednesday that an Eastern Air Lines DC9 crash that took 72 lives near Charlotte, N.C. 10 months ago occurred because the crew was busy discussing politics and used cars.

In its formal report summarizing its intensive investigation of the crash, the board found that "the probable cause of the accident was the flight crew's lack of altitude awareness at critical points during the approach due to poor cockpit discipline in that the crew did not follow prescribed procedures."

The crew's disregard of a low-altitude warning signal, the board said, "may be indicative of the attitudes of many other pilots who regard the signal as more of a nuisance than a warning."

Eastern Flight 212 slammed into a wooded area 3.3 miles short of Runway 36 at Charlotte's Douglas Municipal Airport at 7:34 a.m. last Sept. 11, killing immediately 71 of the 82 persons aboard. Another died of injuries a month later.

The captain, James E. Reeves, was among those killed. The first officer, James M. Daniels Jr., who was flying the plane at the time, survived.

The flight had originated in Charleston, S.C., and was en route to Chicago.

The safety board, ruling out any mechanical problems, said Reeves had failed to call out required altitude reports and that both men were distracted at a critical point in their descent by gawking out the window at an amusement park below.

The board said the cockpit voice recorder showed that during the descent to Charlotte, until about two and a half minutes prior to impact, the flight crew "engaged intermit-

PUC to act on Pike utility rate request

MILFORD — The Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission (PUC) will act on a revised rate petition by the Pike County Light and Power Co. (PCLPC) in two or three weeks, according to a PUC spokesman.

The commission's Bureau of Rates and Research will either approve or reject the PCLPC's request for a 25 per cent electric rate increase and eight per cent gas hike before a formal hearing, the spokesman said.

PCLPC, pleading near bankruptcy with a $120,000 deficit last year, filed a petition with the PUC Monday that would give the utility $271,000 in additional electric revenues and $19,900 in extra gas revenues.

The company had originally sought increases of $348,000 in revenue from a proposed 35 per cent electric rate hike and $35,400 from a 13 per cent natural gas rate increase.

Although PCLPC has revised its figures downward, individuals and groups, who filed complaints with the PUC against the original rate requests, continue to oppose the revised figures.

The spokesman for the PUC explained that even if the rate bureau approves PCLPC's petition and allows the revised rate hikes, a future hearing will be held to determine if the increases are proper.

"If the commission decides that the rates are unfair after hearing complaints and reviewing the company's operation, then a refund or rollback to consumers will be ordered at six per cent interest," the spokesman said.

"No matter what the Bureau of Rates decides on PCLPC's petition, hearings will be held on the matter in the future," he added.

Warner Depuy, Pike County commissioner, said the county does not intend to withdraw its protest over the rate hike.

"Their (PCLPC) revised figures only shows that there was a need to object in the first place," Depuy said.

"We will continue our opposition at a hearing in the hope of ascertaining the overall validity of fuel multiplier which remains fixed," he said.

Depuy said it "is hard for me to believe the utility is facing bankruptcy, but if that is the case it might not be a bad idea for them to sell their franchise to PP&L or Met-Ed."

The Delaware Valley School District, J.O. Ryder Rendering Co. and Milton Staub of Milford have all filed complaints against the increase and will continue to fight it at a hearing.

Eldest member honored at home on the grange

BRODHEADSVILLE — Seldom was heard a discouraging word about 82-year-old Hannah Kresge recently as well-wishers gathered to make the dignified octogenarian feel at home on the grange.

The oldest member of the Mineola Grange of Brodheadsville, Mrs. Kresge was honored by over 40 relatives and friends at a surprise celebration based on the old television format of "This Is Your Life."

Arlene Dorshimer, grange lecturer, played Ralph Edwards and read from a large book outlining Mrs. Kresge's history as guests were introduced.

Most of Mrs. Kresge's past was noted from her days as a three and a half pound baby kept in a shoebox by her parents to her more famous achievement as champion cinnamon bun baker at the West End Fair.

"I didn't know a thing about the party. The children usually tell me everything; they're never sneaky. But this time they didn't say a word," Mrs. Kresge said.

After receiving several gifts, Mrs. Kresge reminisced about her past as a grange member.

"There have been a lot of changes in the past several years," Mrs. Kresge noted.

"Surprisingly, I think there has been an increase in membership," she said.

Mrs. Kresge, who recently celebrated her 82nd birthday on July 7, has been a member of the grange for the past 53 years.

Television shop needs variance

MOUNTAINHOME — Barrett Township Zoning Hearing Board heard testimony Tuesday from James Walter and LeRoy Shoesmith on their request for a variance and will hand down a decision once testimony has been transcribed and reviewed.

Walter requested a variance to change a building to a television showroom, retail outlet, and repair shop.

The building owned by Walter is now being used as storage for television parts and as a dropoff point for a commercial bakery.

The variance calls for increasing the size of the building 20 feet by 20 feet in order to adequately transact Walter's television operation.

The building, a non-conforming use, is located in a residential zone on Playhouse Lane.

Walter testified the building is the required 15 feet away from all other property lines, has adequate sewerage facilities and plans call for a 20-by-60-foot blacktop parking area.

The existing structure will not be changed, and only exterior dressing up done. Walter is to submit plans to the zoning board for the proposed addition.

Shoesmith has requested a variance for remodeling, renovating and repairs to the existing building for use as an office building for his construction company.

The building is a non-conforming use in a residential zone on Rte. 390.

Shoesmith testified there would be no structural change to the sides. He stated plans call for dressing up through extensive exterior and interior repairs that will have a desirable effect on the area.

Plans call for parking facilities for clients and staff. Shoesmith testified that no construction equipment will be stored in front of the building.

Because of the economy, Shoesmith said, for the time being, they will concentrate on interior work. Sewerage facilities, according to Shoesmith, are more than adequate and if necessary, there is enough acreage to take care of an addition to the system.

College drums up support

MATAMORAS — Kenneth Woodbury, interim director of Delaware Valley School District's Community College Service Center (CCSC), has formulated a detailed public relations program to elicit public support for the college.

The publicity campaign includes mass mailing of brochures to 27,000 residences in the Tri-State area at a cost of $1,568.

The brochures, outlining the CCSC program, are expected to reach about 75,000 people, Woodbury said.

In addition to mass mailing of brochures, Woodbury informed members of CCSC operating board that news releases, flyers and signs were being prepared to promote the community college program.

He said letters will be sent to all recent graduates of Delaware Valley High School and an information booth will be established at the August Delaware Valley Fair and Farm Show.

Presently, there are only 11 students who have shown interest in enrolling at CCSC, but Woodbury believes as the publicity campaign gets underway the numbers of students will increase sharply.

Operating board members had asked Woodbury to present a public relations outline for the next 90 days in order to increase the school's visibility in the county.

At the first operating board meeting, members had expressed concern over criticism of the community college by a local taxpayers' group.

Ed Anchel, operating board chairman, felt a strong public relations program would open the college to the public. He argued no one in the community would be opposed to the college if "they understood what we were doing."

In other business, the operating board took the following actions:

— Approved a request to the Delaware Valley School Board to construct a CCSC sign on Rte. 209 in front of the high school. The sign would identify the service center.

— Approved a cooperative arrangement with the Pike County Library to use the facility as a reference center.

Apollo - Soyuz rare opportunity

Those of you who were able to join the early birds to watch the Soviet half of the joint space launch were treated to an unique sight, seen before only by Russian engineers and a handful of officials.

Don't feel alone, though; the Russian populace also saw the launch of a Soviet spacecraft live for the first time. It's all part of the legendary Russian inferiority complex: They need to appear perfect, even to themselves, so a space launch isn't shown until it has been accomplished perfectly.

Either the Soviets are feeling more confident about their substantial space accomplishments or the publicity buildup for this spectacularly visible bit of U.S.-Soviet detente made it impossible to not show the Soyuz launch live. Either way, it was a treat of historic proportions.

The differences between the American and Russian spacecraft and launch procedures were intriguing, but far more interesting were the similarities. Realistically, of course, there could be no significant differences, given the equality of technical advancement. At this point, there is only one sure way of launching a space vehicle, and it doesn't matter much whether the launch director talks in Russian or English, or whether the button designations read in one language or the other. The language of the computer and the laws of physics are universal.

There is a lesson there for all of us if we will take the trouble to learn it. Nature and the universe present all mankind with the same problems. There are only a few basic solutions to those problems, no matter how they're stated or to what science or diety they are attributed.

Since man first began to assert his dominance in this planet ("spaceship earth," the astronauts call it) he has gone it alone, at great waste of energy, intelligence and resources. This joint space mission is aimed at the very practical goal of cementing our newly developed ties with the Soviet Union. That's a political aim, and neither the results nor the spirit are to be trusted at this time.

But the larger lesson of Apollo-Soyuz is that there is much mankind can gain by working together to solve the problems of hunger and poverty, and forge progress in space exploration and in other scientific fields — medicine, for example. It would be a shame if we did not make use of this valuable lesson.

- "Never in the history of the human race have such a big bunch of people been so beholden to such a small bunch of people."
- "We have met the enemy, and they aren't all that tough."
- "Get lost, young man, get lost."
- "Give me liberty or give death to those who would deny it to me."
- "Caveat Emptor — don't trust nobody."
- "Fifty Four-Forty — or I'll go to Sears."

He might have a care about what happens to a people when they have the jitters too long. Does going through decades of this unstringing us? Do perceptions and values begin to change after several generations live out their lives being told by those with prestige and authority that there may not be a tomorrow, but, if there is one, they may wish they had died yesterday. Once upon a time people imagined the end of the world would come when the sun got cold. No more.

When you're in the fox holes long enough, do you remember how you came to be in one or why? The eye of the mind locks onto an infinite Hindu cartwheel of Americans, Egyptians, Cambodians, Jews, Irishmen, Turks, Christians frozen forever putting daggers into each other. Life as a way of rolling death. If cancer doesn't get you, the Commies will. Smoke cigarettes or jog through the parks chased by cardiologists imploring you to allow them to measure your

Mr. Schlesinger says the American Presidency might conceivably start a nuclear war but within moderation. No missile fusillade is contemplated, only one shot, an atomic shell over the bow of the Ukraine. Comrade Dictator, the loss of Kiev is not to be regarded as a hostile act but a warning that our government would regard the seizure of Albania in the most serious light.

Method to the madness?

The Secretary of Defense is a practitioner of the military doctrine that one way to immobilize potential enemies is to appear slightly unpredictable, a touch mad. Never let them presume they understand our logic of our self-interest. Keeps 'em off balance and guessing. So from time to time we must do things which are not in our self-interest in order to serve our self-interest. But what is the difference between feigning emotional instability in high places and official madness? Will the other side know, and does it give us a clue as to who wrapped the tuna fish in the tin foil?

The President, against the advice of his Defense Department, has asked Congress for money to build a $1.2 billion nuclear cruiser. There are so many new weapons. Have you heard of the PGMs? Precision guided munitions. Ours are called Maverick and TOW; the Russians' are called Sagger and Snapper; the British version is Swingfire; and the Franco-German seeing-eye cannon ball is called HOT. Automatic death from a long way off.

A half-million scientists and engineers around the globe spend their full time working on new weapons. Their collective accomplishment has been to make war so automatic as to drain from it the appearances of valor. Soldiers dress like businessmen and the determination of victory is a computational procedure. The Cambodians capture 39 seamen on the Mayaguez; we lose 40 men getting them back so they win; but hold on, a recount reveals only 37 lost. We win and the liberated seamen celebrate by threatening to file suit. To have meaning, death and the threats thereof must come at gracious intervals.

"You won't catch me complaining of any war," wrote Robert Frost in September, 1914, "much less a great war like this that we wage on both sides like mystics for a reason beyond reason." Six decades of death later, mysticism is replaced by madness and no reason by too many. Put us out of our jitters, kill us, but stop explaining why.

Detente in space

WASHINGTON — Detente still has problems on earth; but it's working up yonder.

The joint nine-day space flight of an American and a Soviet spacecraft, scheduled for mid-July, is an example of mankind's togetherness (even in its most literal meaning) overshadowing any detente measures so far taken on earth by the world's two superpowers.

The five men (three American astronauts and two Soviet cosmonauts) who are going to rendezvous and dock 140 miles above the earth are opening a new era in space flight and exploration.

Obviously, this joint flight is less spectacular and startling than the Soviets' first manned earth orbiting, or America's landing men on the moon. But its significance goes way beyond appearances, even conceivably ending up in the far reaches of the universe, millions of light-years away.

This flight of an American Apollo spacecraft, with its rendezvous and docking with a Soviet Soyuz spacecraft, opens these new doors to space exploration:

1 — It is the first "hands-across-space" example of international co-operation in manned space flight. Such joint flights have been dreamed of since 1962, when Vice President Johnson first proposed it at the U.N.

Then in 1972, Richard Nixon and Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin agreed in Moscow to a joint flight that would use a common docking system. Now, three years later, that flight is ready for successive blastoffs — first the Soyuz from the Soviet cosmodrome in Kasakystan; then, seven hours later, the Apollo from the Kennedy Space Center, Florida.

Docking system

2 — That new and jointly developed docking system is the key to success of this flight, and the door-opener, hopefully, to all kinds of joint international flights in the future. For unless spacecraft of different nations are equipped to join up in space and permit transfer back and forth of crews, manned space exploration co-operation is idle talk.

3 — Also, a common rendezvous and docking facility for all future spacecraft of whatever nationality adds a real rescue potential to every space flight. With it, an Apollo crew could go to the rescue of a Soyuz crew in distress, and vice versa, other factors being manageable.

4 — Obviously, if early joint manned flights such as this first one prove successful, and with space flight exploration being astronomically expensive, the cost to both the United States and Russia (and to any other country participating) can be significantly reduced by sharing expenses.

Racing to the moon (a race the United States won hands down) was fantastically costly to both countries — $35 billion for the United States and probably the same for the Soviet Union. Now, with the two countries co-operating in orbiting the earth, they could avoid the even larger cost of a race to the stars — a destination which is surely man's goal, give or take a few centuries.

The cost of this first joint Soviet-U.S. manned space venture? The U.S. cost is put at something under a quarter of a billion dollars. And while the Soviets never disclose cost figures of their space programs, the U.S. space agency estimates the Soviets have invested about the same.

The Apollo-Soyuz flight is actually only another small step in man's journey to the stars, fulfilling our spiritual and physical need to truly become citizens of the universe — and to actually possess it.

You can lose dependency but still keep deduction

(Fourth of seven columns)

Sylvia Porter

Many of you assume that if you can't take the dependency deduction, you can't get the medical expense deduction for that person either. This is just not so.

If the person is related to you as required by law (your mother, say) and you (1) actually pay the expenses of her medical care; and (2) contribute more than half her support, you're entitled to the deduction. This is true even though you can't take a personal exemption for her because her gross income is $750 or more.

To illustrate, say you are married and give $3,000 in '75 to help support your mother, of which $2,000 is for medical expenses. Your mother has investments which give her a yearly income of $1,500. This immediately disqualifies her as your dependent, for her income is far too high — but although you can't claim her as a personal exemption, you can deduct the $2,000 of her medical costs.

Or say you're supporting a married daughter whose income is less than $750. Talk to her now, make sure she doesn't file a joint return with her husband or you'll lose the dependency deduction. But even if she does file a joint return, you do not forfeit the medical expenses you pay for her — assuming you're contributing more than half her support.

Also, keep in mind that transportation expenses to and from doctor or hospital — such as cab fares or auto expenses — are deductible. Don't risk forgetting a single expense item; keep your records up-to-date.

You can take a deduction of 7 cents a mile for medical transportation if you use your own car, and deduct, in addition, tolls and parking fees. Keep those records of fees.

You even may be able to deduct long distance travel, Prentice-Hall emphasizes. As an illustration, a New Yorker who had moved to California was permitted to deduct the cost of transportation to and from his New York physician for an annual check-up, because he had a bona fide medical purpose for the trip.

Of course, if you're in a hospital, you don't have to allocate between the medical and the room and board portions of the bill: all the costs are deductible. But how about food and lodging while en route to an out-of-town hospital? The courts have decided that former definitions of "transportation" of this sort were too narrow and that the full cost of getting a patient to and from the hospital — including food and lodging — should be deductible. What's more, since the spouse had to accompany the patient on the trips, the courts approved a deduction for the spouse's food, and lodging en route as well.

Cost of nurse

While the cost of a nurse to care for a sick dependent is a recognized medical expense, suppose you hire an attendant, or even a relative, to take care of an ill family member? Can you still deduct the cost as a medical expense? Yes. To the extent the person you hire performs nurse-like services, you get the deduction; the deduction hinges on the nature of the services rendered, not on the person's experience or title.

Example: An elderly man convalescing from an operation was advised by his physician that a full-time attendant was necessary. He hired for $2,300 a year an attendant who had no special qualifications for nursing. The taxpayer was able to show that most of the attendant's duties involved nurse-like services and was allowed $1,500 of the $2,300 as medical expense.

Example: The husband of a woman suffering from severe arthritis was told by her physician she needed someone to help her in and out of bed and to prevent her from falling. The husband paid their daughter $72 a month to care for her mother. Even though the daughter had no nursing experience, half of the $72 a month was for "nurse-type" services and was held deductible.

The deduction for the cost of providing nursing services is broader than you probably realize — but you must prove your right to the deduction. This is why now is the time to prepare written daily schedules of duties performed and a careful job description.

Friday — Volunteers' out-of-pocket expenses.

'Something went wrong here'

Research report

By RICHARD L. WORSNOP

IN A DECISION handed down in 1971, the Supreme Court acknowledged that the use of busing to achieve racial balance in public schools might be "administratively awkward, inconvenient and even bizarre in some situations and may impose burdens on some . . ." It was almost as if the Court had anticipated the bitter reaction to the school busing program that went into effect in Boston last September.

An expanded busing plan that is to begin this fall promises to be even more "administratively awkward" and to arouse even greater opposition. Last year's program involved only two parts of the city — South Boston and Roxbury — and the projected busing of 17,000 students. The new plan, announced by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. on May 10, will embrace the entire city and require the busing of approximately 21,000 students.

The Garrity plan is nothing if not complex. It sets up eight community school districts plus a citywide district of 26 "magnet schools" with special programs designed to attract an integrated student body. Moreover, it allows wide variances in the racial composition of the community districts — from 95 per cent white, five per cent minorities in East Boston to 40 per cent white, 60 per cent minorities in Madison Park.

THE BUSING issue has long been portrayed as a classic liberal-vs.-conservative, black-vs.-white confrontation. But now a number of blacks and liberals are having second thoughts about busing. For example, Coleman A. Young, the black mayor of Detroit, filed a brief with U.S. District Court there opposing a proposed citywide busing program. He argued that it would "have the opposite effect of that desired — schools will be re-segregated instead of desegregated."

These are almost precisely the sentiments of Louise Day Hicks, a conservative member of the Boston City Council and a long-time busing opponent. In denouncing Judge Garrity's expanded busing plan, she said: "He has created a legal monstrosity that in the end will produce what we have been trying to avoid from the beginning — a racially segregated Boston."

WHAT both Young and Hicks were saying, in effect, is that busing will trigger an exodus to the suburbs of middle-class white families. When this happens, the schools become even more racially imbalanced than before and the central city is deprived of part of its former tax base.

A busing program involving both a city and its suburbs might alleviate the problem of white flight. But the U.S. Supreme Court rejected such arrangements in a decision handed down last July. In a case involving cross-district busing between Detroit and its suburbs, the Court held that "An inter-district remedy might be in order where the racially discriminatory acts of one or more school districts caused racial segregation in an adjacent district or where district lines have been drawn on the basis of race." But "without an inter-district violation and inter-district effect, there is

Two preachers argued long and loud,
Of what and why and when and whether.
One day they died; then side by side,
They went away together.

no constitutional wrong calling for an inter-district remedy."

The NAACP immediately announced that it would continue its court fight for cross-district busing in Detroit. And the city of Boston is appealing Judge Garrity's new busing plan. Busing, originally thought of as a solution, has instead become part of the problem.

Stories Behind Words

By William Penfield

Zest

The practice of putting orange or lemon peel into food or drink to give it piquancy is centuries old.

The English learned it from the French, and the French, no doubt, learned it from some of the people along the Mediterranean.

The French name for lemon or orange peel was "zeste," which became "zest" in English.

As is often the case, "zest" acquired a broader meaning — something that gives piquancy or relish to food, drink, one's actions or speech.

Reward offered for robot

NEW YORK (UPI) — A Manhattan insurance adjusting firm said Wednesday it was offering a $7,500 reward for the return of a stolen robot and the conviction of the robbers.

Harold Smith, president of Harold Smith Adjustors, the New York representative of Lloyd's of London, said the robot, Leahcim, was stolen on June 12 from the parking area of the Holiday Inn on the Pennsylvania Turnpike in New Stanton, Pa.

Smith said Michael Freeman, 28, a Baruch College management professor developed Leahcim—which is Michael spelled backwards—as a teaching aid.

Freeman's wife, Gail, uses the robot in her fourth grade class at P.S. 106 in the Bronx to handle routine classwork while she gives individual attention to the students, Smith said.

Freeman drove to Chicago to display Leahcim on the Phil Donohue Show on WGN-TV, Smith said. When he was returning to New York, Smith said, he stopped overnight at the motel.

During the night someone broke the lock on Freeman's panel truck and stole Leahcim.

The robot, which weighed at least 200 pounds, was insured with Lloyd's of London for $75,000, Smith said. He offered a $7,500 reward for information leading to the return of the robot and the conviction of the robbers.

Racism cry triggered in Little murder trial

RALEIGH, N. C. (UPI) — An outcry of racism and demands for a mistrial were triggered Wednesday when the prosecution rejected another black as a potential juror in the trial of Joan Little, a black woman accused of murdering a white jailer she says tried to rape her.

Assistant State Attorney General Lester Chalmers used the prosecution's fourth peremptory challenge to dismiss James S. Morrison, a heavy equipment mechanic from the Wake County town of Apex, during the third day of the trial.

The rejection of Morrison, the fifth black among the 17 jurors so far examined, brought chief defense attorney Jerry Paul to his feet.

"I would like the record to show that the state is again using the peremptory challenge

Gets tough with foreigners, students

Gandhi tightens grip on India

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government tightened its police powers Wednesday by making foreigners liable to jail without trial for up to two years and instituting surveillance of university students.

President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmad announced a revision of the Maintenance of Internal Security Act to bring foreigners not protected by diplomatic immunity under the provisions of the decree.

Legal sources said the revision would probably have no immediate effect and merely "clarified" and made ironclad what was implicit in the original act.

Mrs. Gandhi ordered a state of emergency throughout India on June 26, two weeks after she was convicted of election law violations during her 1971 parliamentary campaign.

Thousands of the prime minister's political opponents have been jailed under the decree, which was unprecedented in peacetime in India. Many of those arrested were not told of the grounds for their arrest or formally charged.

At Delhi University on the northern outskirts of the capital, armed police and civil defense force workers patrolled the sprawling campus and its affiliated colleges as classes resumed after the summer recess.

University spokesmen said large numbers of plainclothesmen were mingling with staff and the 100,000 students, and initiation ceremonies were banned by government order.

Mrs. Gandhi said Tuesday an anti-government campaign led by popular opposition leader Jayprakash Narayan forced her to impose the state of emergency. Her comment was in answer to a cable from American pacifist and pediatrician Dr. Benjamin Spock.

An official government statement said Spock had asked Mrs. Gandhi to release political prisoners and restore democracy in India.

Sources in the state governments of Tamil Nadu and Gujarat, meanwhile, confirmed that the central government has taken over news censorship in those states, the only two of India's 22 which are run by opponents of Mrs. Gandhi.

The sources said the government sent out teams of censors last week to the state capitals of Madras and Ahmadabad after failing to win compliance with its censorship edicts.

Third largest market chain accused of misleading ads

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Trade Commission Wednesday accused the Kroger Co. — the nation's third-largest supermarket chain — of advertising products not in stock and charging more than advertised prices.

The case is similar to one against A&P, the country's No. 2 chain, which was accused of advertising unavailable sale specials to lure customers into its stores. A&P signed an agreement earlier this year promising to keep such items in stock.

The FTC said a "significant number" of the Kroger stores it checked did not have a "substantial number" of advertised items and in some cases the items in stock actually were selling for more than promised. Kroger, which operates 1,285 stores in 20 states, replied that the FTC's information was based on a two-year-old survey involving many of its smaller stores with inadequate storage space which had since been replaced by larger stores.

Kroger said, "The survey covered both out of stock and overpricing of advertised items and Kroger rated slightly better than the industry average... As a result of the store improvement program along with a continuing and strong emphasis on this very important aspect of our business operations, we are now confident that we do substantially better than the industry average."

To settle the complaint of false, misleading and deceptive advertising, the FTC proposed that Kroger pledge that "all advertised items be readily available for sale at or below the advertised price in each Kroger store covered by the advertisement."

City's police force resigns

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (UPI) — All but a few of this city's 500-man police force, faced with a court order to return to work after rejecting a new contract offer, turned in their badges Wednesday and resigned.

About 350 officers walked out Saturday in a demand for higher wages and job security. The walkout resulted from an order from Chief Bob Stover that the officers end a work slowdown that began when their old contract ended June 30.

When negotiations with a federal mediator failed Tuesday, the city made a new offer to the officers Wednesday. At a noisy membership meeting the officers rejected the offer and decided to resign.

"The city turned around and offered us less money than it had in first place," one of the officers said. "We can't understand why they did it unless they wanted to force the issue."

New York costs drop slightly

Price of food spirals on

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Food Editor

The cost of feeding a family of four last week dropped 6 per cent from the previous week in New York City.

But food prices in general continued to rise. Any possibility of lower prices on fresh vegetables during the peak harvest season later this summer appeared to be washed away in parts of the northeast and other sections of the country hit by torrential rains and windstorms.

The New York market basket figure is based on a weekly 38 item study by the Department of Consumer Affairs. Its cost of $67.11 was 38 cents below that of the week ending July 4.

But in a Dallas supermarket, the price of a pound of butter rose to $1.22 a pound, while chicken was as dear as meat in some cities covered by UPI's regular survey of basic food prices in the United States.

Hartford's top price of 99 cents a pound for whole broiler fryer chickens was almost double the average of 58 cents recorded last March 16. The low of 48 cents a pound in San Diego was 10 cents below the average. At the higher prices, about the only way to save money is by using the birds in combination dishes, such as main dish salads or hot entrees, including Spanish paella and chicken a la king.

Bargains in pork chops were equally hard to find. A high of $2.28 a pound for loin end chops was reported in Cincinnati, almost a dollar above the average. The low, 99 cents, was in Phoenix.

The butter price in Dallas represented a 26 cent a pound increase over the average during the base week last March 16. The low of 89 cents in Hartford, Phoenix, Buffalo and Milwaukee dropped 7 cents below the average. One Hartford supermarket sold a premium brand of corn oil margarine for the same price as butter there. At 89 cents a pound, it was the top for the week in UPI's survey. The low, 53 cents, was recorded in Grand Rapids.

Picnickers looking for inexpensive eggs to hard boil or devil could find them in San Diego. The 48-cent-a-dozen price for large grade A eggs there was the national low, 29 cents below the average. The high of 85 cents a dozen in Hartford and Honolulu was 8 cents above the average.

Ground chuck for hamburgers, meatloaf, meatballs and combination dishes rose to $1.39 a pound in Miami, and was $1.28 or $1.29 in five other cities. However, Los Angeles reported only 69 cents, 26 cents below the March average, and in six cities it sold for 87 to 89 cents a pound, compared with the 95 cent a pound average.

The outlook for home bakers was about the only cheerful note. A five pound bag of flour sold for as little as 75 cents in Grand Rapids, 25 per cent below the average last March. The high was $1.29 in an east midtown market in New York City's borough of Manhattan, but the same size bag topped the $1 average in only seven other cities on UPI's checklist.

Vaccine to prevent rabies tested

By J. A. TANNENBAUM
Dow Jones-Offaway News

An estimated 30,000 Americans this year will have to undergo the agony of antirabies vaccination. Often they will be children bitten by an unknown dog or cat. Others will be campers, exurbanites and even some city dwellers who have encountered a bat, skunk or fox.

Chances will be extremely high that the biting animal is not rabid, particularly if it's a dog. But unless the animal can be observed there isn't any guarantee it is rabies-free. Hence, the bite victim often hasn't any choice but to undergo vaccination.

Vaccination, following exposure to rabies, is usually successful because the disease has an incubation period of 10 days to a year or more. But if a bite victim delays vaccination until symptoms of the disease actually appear it is usually too late to save him; only a handful of people have been known to survive rabies.

It is against this background that public-health authorities now are closely watching the first human tests in this country of an entirely new antirabies vaccine, grown on human cells.

The vaccine, a decade in development, appears likely to give close to 100 per cent protection against rabies. In addition, it can prevent rabies after only half a dozen relatively painless injections. This alone should help ease widespread apprehension about antirabies vaccination and perhaps reduce the need for often-frenzied searches for dogs and other animals suspected of having bitten someone.

Tests in human volunteers of the new vaccine are under way in at least half a dozen countries. Here in the U.S. its safety and effectiveness have been tested in volunteers known to be rabies-free, and federal researchers recently have begun its limited use in animal-bite victims. If government regulators are satisfied with results of planned trials, the new vaccine could be widely available in perhaps two years, authorities say.

Development of the new rabies vaccine is not likely to be greeted with the same headlines that accompanied, say, Salk polio vaccine. Statistically, rabies wouldn't appear to be much of a public-health problem.

Thanks to years of compulsory vaccination of dogs, human rabies deaths have become exceedingly rare in the U.S. There have been only nine since 1969, the most recent being the death earlier this year of a 60-year-old Minnesota man who had been bitten by a stray cat.

Yet, health authorities say, few diseases have required as much vigilance to keep under control as rabies. It is the main reason most towns and cities continue to require licensing of dogs and maintain dog catchers, despite the current very low incidence of the disease in domestic dogs.

More worrisome rabies is being detected in increasing frequency in wildlife, particularly skunks and bats, where its spread is impossible to control. As suburbs expand into the habitats of these animals, and as more Americans take to the woods for recreation, there is an increasing risk of people coming into contact with a rabid animal.

Rabies, of course, has been one of the most feared diseases for centuries, and world-wide it still kills hundreds of people a year. It is caused by a virus usually harbored in an infected animal's saliva.

When transmitted to a human by an animal bite, the virus infects the central nervous system, leading almost certainly to mental paralysis and death. Among the symptoms is excruciating pain that can be triggered by an attempt to swallow water; hence rabies is often called "Hydrophobia," or fear of water.

A lesson in sand casting

By PHYLLIS FIAROTTA

Plaster casting can be a family project enjoyed on a kitchen table or at the beach on a sunny day. The two basic supplies you need are sand and plaster of paris; both can be purchased at your local hardware store. Our flower sun is an earthy creation just waiting for a vacant wall.

1. Select a sturdy shallow box; for example, a shirt or sweater box, to hold your sand.
2. Buy a bag of sand or bring one home from the shore.
3. Line the box with aluminum foil.
4. Pour the sand in a bucket or pot and wet thoroughly.
5. Fill the box  $\frac{3}{4}$  full with wet sand. Smooth the sand evenly.
6. Press the bottom of a soup

11. Carefully spoon the plaster into the mold up to the level of the sand.

12. When the plaster has hardened slightly, insert a large paper clip or a loop of heavy wire into it near the top and centered (Fig. 3).

13. The casting will dry slowly because of the wet sand and will take anywhere from four days to two weeks. To speed up the drying process, place the box in the sun on the third day.

14. Remove the dried casting carefully, shaking excess sand onto newspaper. The casting should then be allowed a few days of additional drying.

15. Hang by the clip or wire loop.

16. To cast at the beach, choose a warm sunny day. Carry water to a dry section of sand (do not work at the water's edge) and wet an area for your casting. Hot dry sand under and on the sides of the casting is necessary for quick drying. Cast early in the day for maximum drying time. Bring aboard or a sturdy surface with you so the casting can be carried home safely. Allow a few more days of drying at home in a warm place.

Casting ideas

Any three-dimensional object can be used for casting, even a ceramic statue. Designs can be abstract or a silly impression like your footprint. Items can be embedded in the mold, i.e., coins and decorative trims or natural objects such as stones and shells. The plaster can be tinted different colors using commercial dyes or the sand can be dyed in strong concentrates of dye. Castings can be small enough for a paper-weight or large enough for decorative panel.

To receive my free newsletter on using tin cans and paper containers for craft projects you and your children will enjoy, send your requests along with a self-addressed, stamped, business-sized envelope to The Leisure Craftsman in care of The Pocono Record.

Cool wardrobe can reflect taste, summer heat rays

STROUDSBURG The energy crisis is still very much with America this summer and is being reflected, at least in the Stroudsburg area, in reduced air conditioning in many area businesses.

Shoppers and employees can learn to dress more comfortably to keep cool this summer in higher temperatures.

According to the Federal Energy Administration (FEA) comfort depends on how fast the human body is losing heat. A man working at a desk gives off 390 BTU's (British thermal units) of heat hourly; a woman gives off 330 BTU's. Clothes block the outward flow of heat.

In winter, clothes provide necessary insulation, but in the summer too many clothes keep heat in instead of letting it out.

Fewer clothes facilitate the flow of heat. So, women should wear sleeveless or short-sleeved dresses and wear clothes with an open weave. Skirts rather than pants are cooler.

Sandals or open shoes are helpful. Stockings or hats should be eliminated, and a minimum of undergarments should be worn.

Men should stick to short-sleeved shirts. And, if businesses okays it, they should avoid ties and jackets. Beltless trousers are recommended.

Outside both sexes should wear lighter colored clothing to reflect light. Wearing hair short and off the neck also contributes to feeling cool.

A study commissioned by the FEA shows how many extra degrees of air temperature a person can tolerate when changes in clothing are made. For example, replacing light slacks with a light skirt makes woman able to stand temperatures a degree and a half higher. When a man removes his light jacket, he can tolerate temperatures two degrees higher.

The FEA asked several best-dressed men and women and fashion designers what they wear to keep cool. Most, while explaining their routines, scoffed at air conditioning.

Washable tee shirts and cotton skirts were cited as summer standby by both Mrs. Winston Guest and Mrs. Oscar Wyatt, Jr., both regulars on the best-dressed list. Cotton was a favorite summer fabric of many celebrities, including Mrs. William Paley, designated "best-dressed woman of our time" by an International Best Dressed poll committee.

Deanery rep to explain planned pilgrimage

EAST STROUDSBURG — Mrs. David McGarry, deanery representative for Monroe and Pike Counties for the pilgrimage planned by the Diocesan Marian commission for members of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Scranton, will hold a meeting of representatives of the area at 7:30 p.m. Sunday at Lake Valhalla, East Stroudsburg R.D. 2.

The pilgrimage is scheduled for Oct. 18 and 19. Pilgrims will visit the shrines of Mother Elizabeth Ann Seton and the Grotto of Our Lady of Lourdes, Emmitsburg, Md., and the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D.C. A program of devotional and aesthetic program is planned.

Mrs. McGarry will explain registration procedures and brochures will be made available to anyone interested.

Beware improper canning

By LORA SHARPE
Family Fare Editor

STROUDSBURG — There are more wrong than right ways to can fruits and vegetables.

Dawn Olson, Monroe County home economist, talked of both Tuesday at a canning demonstration at the YMCA, Stroudsburg.

The right methods for canning are the boiling water bath for fruits, tomatoes, pickles and jellies and the pressure canner for all vegetables (except tomatoes).

Wrong ways include the open kettle method, canning in a microwave oven, using the regular oven to can, putting aspirin in jars as a preservative and using a dishwasher to can.

It is also wrong to use the boiling water bath for canning vegetables. Vegetables are low acid foods and can contain botulism bacteria. Only the high temperatures (240 degrees at 10 pounds pressure) achieved in a pressure canner will kill those bacteria. The temperature of boiling water (212 degrees) will not.

The Cooperative Extension Service will check pressure canners' gauges to make sure the canner is in order.

Only jars and lids made for canning should be used. Proper jars will be marked with company names written into the glass. Reusing mayonnaise jars or peanut butter jars is a dangerous procedure — jars may crack under the extremes of hot and cold in the canning process.

Jars should be checked, especially on the sealing surface, for cracks and knicks.

Only pre salt — kosher or canning salt — should be used in canning. This will prevent residues left by table salt, which contains a filler.

There are two ways to pack food into jars — hot and cold or raw. The Cooperative Extension Service recommends the hot pack for more satisfactory results. Foods are heated to boiling or cooked in boiling water for a certain amount of time and then packed — not jammed — into the jars. The cooking liquid should be used to fill the jars to keep in all the nutrients.

Jars are closed firmly with two-piece metal lids or zinc lids. Air bubbles should be removed with a knife inserted down the sides before closing.

Year of the spittle bug

By GEORGE ABRAHAM
SPITTLE BUGS: This has been the year of the spittle bug. In case you don't know what a spittle bug is, we'll tell you. It's the insect that covers itself with a frothy mass of bubbles. Each mass looks like somebody "spit" on the plant. If you poke around inside one of these masses you'll see a little greenish insect. This is the spittlebug nymph (young one), and it might be described as the bug with a built-in air conditioner.

Inside that frothy mass, it doesn't make any difference whether it's hot or cold, rain or shine. This insect has the same temperature all the time.

CONTROL: Actually it's not too serious a pest and if you want to skip chemical spraying, your plants won't suffer. Sevin sprayed or dusted on the spittle mass will kill the insect.

CARE OF FUCHSIA: The fuchsia or Lady's Eardrops is one of the showiest plants there is. A common complaint now is non-flowering, or bud drop. Flower and bud drop can be due to high temperature or poor light. For summer bloom in shaded gardens, some fuchsia growers suggest storing the plant more or less dry in the cellar over winter. It should have some light. Indoors, fuchsia do not form flower buds at temperatures above 65 degrees. Their normal blooming season is from March to June, although there are many of them in bloom right now, in hanging baskets. In cool climates their normal blooming period is all year long.

Here's a schedule some gardeners use: In summer, grow the plant in partial sun outdoors. Keep it well watered and before frost, move it to a cool spot (45 degrees F) and not too bright a window. Water it sparingly.

In January or early February, prune the plant back hard and repot in a soil mixture of one part each of sand, peat and loam. Then move it to an east or west window with night temperature of 50 degrees.

Water it regularly, mist the tops and feed it a liquid plant food. Move it outdoors when danger of frost is over.

As a hanging basket, the fuchsia is hard to beat. Keep it out of direct sun for best results.

GREEN THUMB CLINIC: "This year all our radishes were pithy and quite hot to the taste. What caused this?"

ANSWER: Some varieties are hotter than others. A good one for the home garden is Champion, maturing in 28 days. It reaches the size of a silver dollar and still stays solid and rather mild. Roots are round and brightly colored. They need lots of water for growth. A dry soil means a hot radish.

Sexism in schools

By JUDITH GELBER
Time was when the elementary schools, including the principals' offices, were staffed mostly by women. However, the men have made great strides in recent years in ending this sexual bias, particularly at the administrative level.

Unfortunately, this male success story has been achieved at the expense of the women in education.

According to statistics in The New York Times, 41 per cent of the elementary school principals in the '40s were women; 38 per cent in the '50s; 22 per cent in the '60s; and under 20 per cent today. Furthermore, "98 per cent of the secondary school principals and nearly 99 per cent of the superintendents' posts in the nation's public schools" are held by men.

The reasons advanced for this situation include the belief on the part of school boards "that while it is appropriate for women to care for and to teach children, administration is not a woman's job." Also, the men who entered teaching after World War II found that they couldn't make enough money to support their families.

lies in the classroom and therefore "moved into the better-paying administrative jobs."

A factor in the movement of men into elementary education, but not mentioned in The Times' article, was the post-World War II theory that women had a smothering hold on the nation's children. It was argued that boys were subject to almost exclusive female domination from the moment of their birth to their adolescence, in schools as well as at home.

This situation was thought unhealthy because it supposedly prevented boys from developing masculine characteristics. Without male models to imitate, it was said, boys tended to become confused about their masculinity. Philip Wylie gave an enormous push to this belief in his book, "Generation of Vipers," with his blistering attack on "momism."

But the problem has not been rectified as supporters of this theory would wish since women still make up 80 per cent of the teaching staffs in the elementary schools.

However, regardless of the soundness of this theory, men have been encouraged in their efforts to break the female monopoly in the elementary schools by their success in eliminating women from administrative posts.

The taxpayers should be aware, though, of a major drawback to this great influx of men into education. There is nothing accidental in the fact that teachers' salaries have increased considerably at the same time that more and more men have entered the public school system.

However, discrimination on the basis of sex is unfair and unlawful. Our society must therefore provide equal opportunities for men without caring about the financial consequences, even though it means that talk about equal opportunities for women, particularly in school administration, is just so much hot air.

Resistor: Horseshoe nail of modern transportation

NEW YORK (UPI) — A resistor is a tiny electrical gadget almost as common as the nail. It usually costs a few pennies.

But a Malvern, Pa., firm, Vishay Intertechnology, has gone to great trouble to make a super-reliable resistor that sells for $3 each even in large quantities.

Why?
The answer is hinted at in George Herbert's famous poem that says "For want of a nail a shoe was lost..." and ultimately a horse, a battle and a kingdom. Substitute aircraft or ship for horse and you start to realize that the resistor is a horseshoe nail of modern global transportation. Lots of the expensive Vishay resistors were used in the U.S. space vehicles that landed on the moon.

"But," says Felix Zandman, Vishay president, "the real measure of the super-reliable resistor's importance is in the coming traffic jam in the skies. Kennedy, O'Hare and other big airports already have traffic jams that can result in fatal crashes. By 1980, there probably will be congestion every day over the North Atlantic that will be potentially just as dangerous as the traffic jams on our automobile freeways are now."

Already 400 planes cross the Atlantic every day. By 1980 the traffic may be 900 planes a day with as many as 250 aloft simultaneously.

For the sake of both maximum safety and maximum fuel economy, it is necessary that the aircraft stick to the prescribed flying lanes and altitudes. There are six of these paths between New York and Europe, each about 125 miles wide and one mile deep and, ideally, the interval between planes in lane is 125 miles. Anything less than that is considered virtually "bumper to bumper" by experienced transoceanic pilots.

Keeping a plane in these lanes is not so easy. There are no buoys or visible reference points on the surface of the sea. Atmospheric conditions often cut off radio contact for hours at a time with the two principal traffic control centers at Gander, Newfoundland, and Shannon, Ireland.

To deal with the problem, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is working out an ambitious new space satellite navigation system called PLACE, an acronym for position location aircraft communications equipment. Surface ships also ultimately will navigate by means of PLACE, which is essentially a long range signal-bouncing system.

"But PLACE will be only as effective as the electronic and electrical gear planes and ships carry to make use of it," explained Zandman, "and that equipment will depend on the reliability of tiny components like Vishay resistors — the shoe nails of the mechanical horses of air and sea."

Vishay resistors will be especially critical small components of a PLACE transceiver being developed by Textron's Bell aerospace division in Fort Worth.

Ordinary resistors are very sensitive, to temperature and other weather changes and can become unstable. Their instability can result in navigation errors of many miles and fatal crashes if used in aerial electronic instruments.

Add Pennsylvania Senate to Shapp's problems list

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a review and analysis of issues facing the Pennsylvania Legislature.

In the Legislature
By DAVID A. MILNE

HARRISBURG (UPI) — In his inaugural address last January, Gov. Milton J. Shapp said that unemployment, inflation and recession were among the biggest problems his administration faces in the next four years.

Seven months later, the governor can add a fourth problem to his list: The Pennsylvania Senate.

Shapp's relationship with the Senate and the Democrats who control it by a 29-20 margin has grown steadily worse since he began his second term and there is no indication that the situation will improve in the immediate future.

The Senate, for example, defeated Herbert Denenberg's nomination to the Public Utility Commission. Shapp had said Denenberg's confirmation was one of his highest priorities.

The lawmakers have refused to negotiate a deal with Shapp that would lead to Philip Kalodner's confirmation as chairman of the PUC in return for the nomination of a former Democratic senator, to another PUC post.

Opposition by Senate Democrats has held up confirmation of three Shapp cabinet officers: Agriculture Secretary Jim McHale, Banking Secretary Carl Delmuth and State Police Commissioner James Barger.

And the Senate Democrats sent Shapp a budget that the governor said he could not live with because it did not provide enough money to operate state government.

Shapp's aides and Senate Democratic leaders say the relationship isn't as bad as many have made it out to be.

"In personal terms, we have a very cordial relationship with the Senate Democratic leaders," said William McLaughlin, Shapp's legislative secretary.

He acknowledged, however, that the personal relationship with the Democratic leaders is much better than the working relationship.

Said Senate Majority Leader Thomas Nolan, D-Allegheny: "We understand the governor and he understands us, and that makes for a good relationship."

But the fact remains that when the governor has called on the Senate Democrats for support on the budget and on major appointments, they have not come through.

Part of the problem appears to be a credibility gap on both sides.

Shapp, for example, thought he had an agreement with the Democratic leadership under which he would support a constitutional amendment reforming the confirmation process if the leaders would support a bill changing the number of votes required for confirmation from 34 down to 26.

Senate leaders now say, however, that they made no such agreement and that there was a misunderstanding on Shapp's part.

On the other hand, Democratic senators have accused the governor of breaking his word.

Sen. Joseph Ammerman, D-Clearfield, last week accused Shapp of reneging on a promise to support a measure providing $17 million in research funds to Penn State. Shapp later pledged to support the appropriation.

Another part of the problem is the nature of the leadership Nolan has provided.

Former Sen. Thomas F. Lamb, Nolan's predecessor as majority leader, consistently supported the governor, even if he disagreed with Shapp's position.

Nolan, however, has been far from faithful and candidly admits it.

He opposed Denenberg, has not worked to win support for Kalodner and helped lead the effort to cut Shapp's budget to provide extra aid to Allegheny and Philadelphia counties.

"I will never support a program that I do not believe in," he said. But Nolan added that on programs he and Shapp agree on he will support the governor 100 per cent.

There is growing anger in the Democratic caucus over the way Shapp has used Lamb to win confirmation of Kalodner as PUC chairman.

Shapp has said he may nominate Lamb as a PUC commissioner, if the Senate confirms Kalodner.

"There is some resentment in the caucus that the governor's office would use Lamb as bait to win approval for someone who is not as popular with the Senate," said Sen. Michael O'Pake, D-Berks.

"I think Senator Ammerman put it well the other day when he told the governor that to use Lamb as blackmail for Kalodner — after Lamb gave the governor sweat and tears for four years — is inhumane."

Ironically, it was the Senate that pressed for appointment of Lamb and Nolan reportedly told Shapp that Kalodner would never be confirmed unless the former senator also was nominated to serve on the PUC.

New environs

By GAIL NEVINS

A few months ago when the most practical thing you could do to buy a sack of sugar was go out and float a neighborhood bond, the sugar companies may actually have dealt a blessing in disguise.

As prices spiraled, consumption plunged, warehouses filled to overflowing and prices began fluttering downward.

But throughout the economic deviations the mounting scientific evidence regarding the negative effects of excessive sugar consumption on human health remained.

Reputable scientific opinions over the years suggest that excessive intake could be a triggering factor in a number of modern ailments (did you know that in the mid-1800s sugar was sold by the ounce and sugar boxes kept under lock and key?).

It's effect on obesity, tooth decay and diabetes is well known and though new developments concerning its impact even on these problems are important and fascinating, this space shall deal with sugar and heart disease.

According to the July issue of Science Digest several medical physicians and researchers suggest links between sugar and increased heart disease.

One theory is that too much

Sugar deadly in diet?

sugar - not animal fat - is the chief cause of coronary thrombosis because it stimulates the body to manufacture too much cholesterol in the blood serum.

The possibility that diet could trigger heart disease was suggested in 1953 by Dr. Ancel Keys of the University of Minnesota, the prevailing medical view being that cholesterol is the number one villain.

But after considerable research Dr. John Yudkin, physician and biochemist at the University of London, points to sugar as an important factor in heart disease.

One of Yudkin's studies reported coronary death rates in 15 countries in relation to the average intake of sugar. It showed that per 100,000 persons, the rate increases steadily from 60 deaths from a Consumption of 20 pounds per year to 200 for 120 pounds, to 750 for 150 pounds.

Yudkin cites several other studies in support of his hypothesis. For example, the Masai tribes of East Africa live largely on meat and milk and practically no sugar, yet there is little heart disease among them. On the other hand, citizens of the British-controlled island of St. Helena in the South Atlantic eat but little animal fat, yet consume an average of 100 pounds of sugar per person annually; the incidence of heart disease on St. Helena is high.

Dr. Meyer Friedman and Ray H. Rosenman of San Francisco point out in their book, "Type A Behavior and Your Heart," that too much sugar in the diet of tense, hard-driving individuals is hazardous and increases the risk of a coronary.

Yudkin is quick to admit that while sugar may be an important cause of heart disease, it is not the only one. Sedentary, smoking, genetic and environmental factors also contribute.

The doctor, however, states unequivocally: "If only a fraction of what is already known about the effects of sugar were to be revealed in relation to any other material used as a food additive, that material would promptly be banned."

Economy driving workers back down on the farm

By KAREN ROTHMYER
Dow Jones-Offaway News

GLASTONBURY, Conn. — Sam Hamilton's last job was in an elcar factory. A few weeks ago, the strapping, blond 17-year-old who had dropped out of school in the ninth grade, started looking for work again.

But there was almost nothing — not even at the minimum wage he had been earning making elcars. So he turned to one industry in the state that was hiring: tobacco.

"My friend got me in here; he knew the boss," Sam explained recently as he took a few minutes away from his work to chat and peel a sun-burned arm. "I like outside work, but the money isn't too good, I'm making $1.80 an hour because I'm only 17."

A few feet away, Juan Anes is carefully working with small tobacco plants. Five months ago, he was laid off from a factory job in Hartford.

A native of Puerto Rico, Anes, 36, had been living in Hartford for four years and wanted to stay. So he, too, came to the tobacco fields, for $2.28 an hour, the adult wage. It's okay," he said with a shrug in his native Spanish. "You have to work."

Sam Hamilton and Juan Anes are typical of hundreds of workers who are newcomers to the tobacco fields this summer. They are residents of this area who previously worked in local factories rather than suffer the long hours, low pay and even lower prestige of farm work. The recession has put them back on the farm, at least this summer.

While elsewhere along the East Coast farmers say they are having no better luck than they ever did in enticing local people into agriculture, Connecticut's tobacco industry is having no trouble finding willing workers, the Connecticut situation may be unusual, but it suggests that when times get tough enough, a job is a job in the eyes of some at the lowest economic levels.

Unemployment in Connecticut is running at a hefty 9.7 percent, and a lot of local factories simply are not hiring. But the local tobacco growers failed to reach an agreement to get their usual influx of contract workers from Puerto Rico this summer. So a flock of local adults is working in the fields here for the first time in more than 30 years.

"For years we tried to recruit local workers, but it never had much effect," Anthony Amenta, executive director of the Shade Tobacco Growers Association, says.

Local workers have clearly preferred to work elsewhere whenever possible.

The traditional migrant nucleus has always been supplemented during July and August by more than 10,000 young people, mainly under 18, who are not covered by the Connecticut minimum-wage and hence work at the federal minimum wage, currently $1.80 an hour for farm workers. Some adult local workers also supplement the work force on a day basis.

John Sartori, personnel manager of Consolidated Cigar Corp., owned by Gulf and Western Industries, Inc., says, "Some of the people applying are semiskilled, with too much pride to go on welfare. Some have exhausted their unemployment benefits."

An adult tobacco worker putting in a normal 48-hour week who heads a family of four and is hired at the base rate of $2.28 an hour makes about $414 a month after taxes. On welfare, he would get $331.97 tax-free and, like a working counterpart, would qualify for food stamps.

Until World War II, of course, most of the workers were locals — a situation dating back to precolonial days, when Indians grew tobacco in this area. Colonists found the tobacco an ideal wrapper for the cigars they were learning to enjoy.

Then, around the turn of the century, Sumatra leaf threatened to take over the market, but the Connecticut Valley growers discovered they could reproduce the Sumatran climate and tobacco leaf by shading the crop with white cheesecloth tents. Today, the area produced more than two thirds of all wrapper tobacco used by the American cigar industry, for such brands as White Owl, Dutch Masters and El Producto. Most of the 4,300 wrapper-tobacco acres are in Connecticut, but some are in the Connecticut river valley in Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire.

Tobacco farming is so unmechanized that it is said to require more manual labor than any other crop.

Milk production down in state

Editors Note: The following is a bi-weekly analysis of agricultural issues in Pennsylvania.

By CHARLES M. MADIGAN
HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Can you imagine taking a nice, fresh, chocolate chip cookie out of the oven, letting it cool for a while and dunking it into a glass of beer?

Or what about adding a half-cup of warm cola to the batter for a hot-milk sponge cake? Or filling up little Elmo's baby bottle with a starchy pint or so of ale?

Of course, that just couldn't happen. But if you look at statistics for milk production 20 years ago, compare them to today's figures and throw in some estimates of population growth, it makes you wonder what people are doing with milk.

Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz was in Harrisburg a while ago to cite the Ford administration's accomplishments in agriculture. And he brought up some good points about milk.

Twenty years ago, he said, farmers in the United States shipped about 123 billion pounds of milk to the public. He estimates that figure will be 117 billion pounds this year.

America's population has grown by leaps and bounds, but its milk consumption figures have dropped. Beer and soft drinks are just about as popular as milk used to be.

According to Butz, Americans consume two-thirds as much beer as milk, and about 80 percent as much soda pop. It can't be the cost that is cutting milk use.

He said he sent one of his staff members to a store in Washington to buy some beer and some milk. The eight-ounce serving of milk cost about 10 cents. The same amount of beer cost 20 cents.

All of these figures are very disturbing to the people who make their living providing milk for the American public. There is an oversupply of milk as it is. Farmers have to sell surplus milk to cheese and ice cream people. And they get paid less for it than for fluid milk.

Part of the cause is probably bad public relations. Some people think milk is dangerous because it has cholesterol in it.

Then again, look at the publicity campaigns that are behind beer and soft drinks. You tell the world you know what you're doing when you drink beer. And from the appearance of some soft drink campaigns, there are certain colas that may promise eternal youth.

And while people are out there getting all the gusto they can out of life, finding that things go better with so-and-so, they don't realize that the dairy industry may be in serious trouble.

Dairymen have opened a publicity campaign to get the good news about milk to the people. Butz says it is having some effect, but the odds are against it.

The irony of the statistics is that they may be painting a grim picture of the future of dairy farming in the United States.

If milk demand continues to decrease, it will hardly be profitable for dairy farmers to continue feeding herds only to be paid prices that are depressed because of oversupplies.

And that could mean a further decline in the number of milk producers.

$19,000 grant tested

Specialist reads DelVal program

MILFORD — Delaware Valley School District has retained Dr. Charles Versacci, chairman of the reading department at East Stroudsburg State College, to evaluate the district's federally funded summer reading program.

The district, faced with the possible loss of $19,000 in federal funds because the program does not provide remedial reading instruction and lacks a reading specialist, decided to hire Versacci after consulting with Thomas Shurtz, state reviewer for Title I funding.

Versacci has already spent two days in the district interviewing administrators, reviewing materials and analyzing the original reading program submitted by the district to the state.

According to Versacci, he will present his report this weekend to administration officials and recommend whether a developmental, remedial or corrective reading program is needed in the district.

"I have been asked to do the initial evaluation of the program, but I will also be on call as a consultant to whatever program is finally developed," Versacci said.

He noted, however, that he would not serve as the districts reading specialist if such a person were required in the future.

Shurtz said officials at the Title I program will review Versacci's recommendations "to see if the district has followed the necessary steps to meet state guidelines."

In order to qualify for Title I funds, a reading program must be either remedial or corrective and have a reading specialist. Delaware Valley's program is currently supervised by reading coordinator Wilma Shay and is classified as a summer reading enrichment program.

Assistant Superintendent Joseph Fotos has maintained that a remedial reading program can not be instituted in a "short five - week summer period."

"If we had an on-going year-round program, the situation would be different," he said. "We will try to meet the recommendations of the report and also comply with necessary state guidelines," Fotos added.

He said Mrs. Shay has already been asked to get emergency certification from the State Bureau of Certification. Fotos said it is hoped Mrs. Shay will get certification waived while she enrolls in a reading specialist program.

Shurtz said he will meet with Versacci and administrators to plan next year's program in the district, but noted this year's federal payments would be withheld if the program does not meet regulations.

Fotos said a detailed reading program outlined by Concerned Taxpayers for Quality Education (CTQE) is also under study, but probably won't be acted upon in the near future.

"Their (CTQE) letter was addressed to the board, so it will be up to them to make a decision on the matter," he said.

At a recent meeting, Eugene Garvey, board president, said the board would respond to CPQE's letter that severely criticized the district's reading program.

Miracle worker on stage

BELVIDERE, N.J. — Blind since infancy, Helen Keller pioneered efforts to aid the handicapped after she overcame the problems that blindness caused for her own life. Her unusual and inspiring biography was presented in part in a 1957 television program, later was expanded for Broadway and now is being performed at the YOR Theater in Belvidere.

The community theater group will present "The Miracle Worker" by William Gibson through July 20 at 8 p.m. Paul DeCoste, who directed most previous YOR productions, will be acting as Paul Jarrett directs.

Krissy Hay, a theatrically gifted 10-year-old, plays Helen Keller at age six and a half, when her father was considering placing her in an asylum. DeCoste portrays Capt. Keller, Helen's father.

Anne Sullivan was eventually brought to the Keller household to tutor Helen, preventing the family from putting Helen in an institution. Sullivan, (Bonnie Young) is successful in keeping Helen out of an asylum only after several turbulent and emotion packed scenes at the home.

Tickets may be obtained at showtime or reserved by calling 475-3588. The theater is on Hardwick Street.

County sponsors classroom

Monroe finds Headstart home

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County's Headstart program may have found a home for September in the basement classrooms of St. John's Lutheran Church in Stroudsburg. The program, which had been run from the Campus Learning Center at East Stroudsburg State College, was forced to relocate because the college needs the space. Earlier this summer, the Monroe County Commissioners agreed if no other housing could be found, the county would pay for the rental of suitable facilities for the program. Commissioner Arlington Martin said Wednesday it has been the responsibility of the county since the beginning of the program to provide housing for the classes. Martin said that in the past, the county has been able to get free housing for the program at the college and Stroudsburg High School. He said the funding received from the federal government is used for program operation only and that it is the responsibility of the county to provide shelter and secretarial help. Martin said the recent resolution approved by the commissioners on the housing was required for federal grants. He said no such resolution was required in the past because the housing for the program was provided for free. Martin said the money to rent the basement of the church for September through December will be taken from the $10,000 the county budgeted for the program this year. Rental costs in 1976 will have to be allocated in next year's budget, he said. Mrs. Nancy B. Shukaitis, commissioner chairman, said county and headstart representatives are working with church trustees to arrive at a rental price. Mrs. Shukaitis said the commissioners were considering constructing a building for the headstart program in the First Ward Park, but that cost estimates of $150,000 were too high. She said the basement classrooms in the church became available when it was announced that students from Intermediate Unit 20 were moving to the Arlington Elementary School on N. Ninth Street. Mrs. Shukaitis said the church basement "is really ideal" for the program.

Martin said the county is looking into a long-term contract of up to five years with the church. Headstart personnel have moved out of the college facility and are temporarily using a vacant office adjacent to the county assessor's office until an agreement is reached on the church. The headstart program serves 30 students for about four hours a day. This year the program operated on a total budget of $49,000. Previous discussion by the commissioners included the possibility of housing the Office for the Aging, Children's Bureau, Mental Health and Mental Retardation program and Headstart all in one location. The church had been considered earlier this year but was not available at that time.

Delaware resource assn. supports dam construction

PHILADELPHIA — Following its usual pattern, a Delaware River basin lobby group Tuesday gave its "unreserved" support to construction of the Tocks Island Dam. The Water Resources Association of the Delaware River Basin, a group which has consistently pushed for the dam and 37-mile long lake from Shawnee-on-Delaware to Port Jervis, N.Y., released an eight-page memorandum outlining its support of the $400 million project. Stating its conclusions were drawn from the congressional-mandated restudy of the project recently completed, the association said that "compared with all possible alternatives — Tocks Island Lake is the most appropriate way (socially, economically and environmentally) to meet the known water related imperatives of the Delaware Basin area people, economy and environment."

A non-profit organization formed in 1959 to oversee and lobby for "orderly development of the Delaware's water resources," the association works closely with the Delaware River Basin commission in many areas. They co-sponsor a Delaware River Basin water conference every year and association personnel participate in many DRBC meetings and activities. The association said the study done by several New York City engineering firms answers questions raised during the past few years by environmentalists and makes dominant facts clear — all pointing to construction of the dam.

Points raised by the association were: — The Delaware River basin will require much more water than already needed by the time Tocks is built. Tocks Lake can help meet the water demands.

— Tocks Lake supplies water for the river basin's homes and economy far more economically than any possible alternative. — Any possible water supply alternative, other than Tocks, must be funded by the user states involved. Tocks is a federal project.

— Water from Tocks Lake is needed as soon as possible, even if it hasn't been designated for use or released solely to improve or maintain downstream water quality.

— Tocks Island Lake provides cooling water essential for needed electrical power generators downstream, while maintaining a flow of fresh water to prevent degradation of the estuary.

— The project's electrical generation supply during peak periods is far more economical than any alternative using oil. A portion of the annual savings from pumped-storage repays much of the dam's construction costs.

— Tocks supplies flood protection needs for people and property downstream. — Recreation needs for large numbers of people can be met through the lake.

— Drawdown or eutrophication will not seriously affect the lake's use for recreation.

S-burg district to borrow $321,000 to meet payrolls

STROUDSBURG — A slumping economy and delinquent taxpayers will force the Stroudsburg Area School Board to borrow up to $321,000 to meet three payrolls in August.

The board voted Wednesday night to borrow no more than $321,000 at 3.78 per cent interest from First Eastern Bank, N.A. Board Treasurer Bernard Frantz said the amount of the loan could be up to $107,000 less than the full amount if tax revenues increase before the end of August. As of May 5, the district was missing $128,681 out of about $2.5 million in real estate tax and approximately $40,000 in other taxes because taxpayers have not paid in full.

In other business, the board: — Passed a resolution to increase the millage of the district's occupational assessment tax from 100 to 150. The tax is expected to bring in $258,975. Frantz voted against the increase. — Approved a resolution to levy a $10 occupational privilege tax on all persons who work within the district. The tax is expected to net $164,175. — Contracted with Servomation Corp. of Bethlehem to manage the cafeteria during the 1975-76 school year for about $14,300.

— Accepted a proposal of H.A. Berkheimer Associates, municipal tax collector, to act as administrator of the $10 occupational privilege tax for five per cent of the gross collections.

— Tentatively approved a plan to send half of the district's 273 kindergarten students to school full days for one quarter and the second half for the next quarter. According to a plan submitted by Russell E. Treible, director of district elementary schools, 50 per cent of the oldest or more mature kindergarten students will attend full-day sessions from Sept. 3 to Nov. 5.

During the second quarter — Nov. 6 to Jan. 23 — the other half, or younger and less mature students, will attend full days. Kindergarten students attended daily, half day sessions this past school year. Treible said he will evaluate the program in January, then decide whether to send students to kindergarten on a bi-weekly basis from Jan. 26 through June 11. The board approved the shift in scheduling to save on transportation costs. — Approved $22,375 in coaches' salaries. Superintendent Samuel O. Wells III said the cost reflects no salary increases.

The board also accepted the resignations of Manter and W. Edmund Magann with reluctance. Manter said he resigned because he would be of little use, to the public until December, when his term expires, since he did not seek reelection. Magann said he is resigning effective Aug. 1 because of faltering health.

The board appointed Mrs. Joan C. Patterson to fill Manter's unexpired term. Manter and Magann had urged her appointment and the appointment of John F. DeVivo to fill Magann's seat. Both Patterson and DeVivo were nominated in both parties during the May primary election.

Police blotter

Home burglarized

EAST STROUDSBURG — A daylight burglary may have netted a thief or thieves booty valued "in the thousands of dollars."

According to East Stroudsburg police, the home of Harold E. Ingerham, 204, Analomink Street, was entered sometime between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Wednesday.

Police said the thief or thieves broke into the house through the back door. They took antique silver coins, jewelry and silver tableware.

In searching for the loot, they ransacked the Ingerham house. Police said a man was seen loading a car in back of the house. Investigation is continuing. No exact estimate of value of the goods taken is yet available.

Faces four charges

STROUDSBURG — A 21-year-old man was remanded to the Monroe County Jail early Wednesday morning following his arrest on four separate charges.

Jon Neil Dennis, address unknown, was captured by Fred Stettler of Barry Street, Stroudsburg when he allegedly tried to steal Stettler's car from a driveway at 3:45 a.m. Wednesday.

According to Stroudsburg police, Dennis had escaped from a police officer several hours before he was captured by Stettler.

Police had found him inside a parked auto owned by Boyd Weiss Jr., of 715 Main Street. While being held by East Stroudsburg police, awaiting the arrival of Stroudsburg police, Dennis ran away. He was chased towards Ann Street. He dove into bushes leading into Pocono Creek police said.

He was charged with criminal mischief, escape, resisting arrest, disorderly conduct and will possibly face other charges pending further investigation, police said.

He was arraigned before District Magistrate Earl Ammerman and taken to the jail in lieu of $5,000 bail.

Collision

MINISINK HILLS — Two cars were damaged Tuesday night when one ran into the other while it was stopped, waiting to turn left off Rte. 209 in Minisink Hills.

State police at Swiftwater said Jacob S. Unangst, 30, of Stroudsburg, was stopped to turn left when he was rammed by a car driven by Robert Copeland, 23, of Washington, D.C.

Police said Copeland failed to notice the flashing turn signal on Unangst's vehicle. No one was injured in the wreck. A total of $1,500 damage was incurred on the two vehicles.

None injured in accident

DELAWARE WATER GAP — A traffic sign was damaged when a car going too fast for conditions went out of control on the Delaware Water Gap exit ramp from Interstate 80 Tuesday night.

State police at Swiftwater said William Overcash, 21, of East Stroudsburg, had apparently exited at a speed too fast for conditions and lost control of the car owned by Margaret Adder of Delaware Water Gap. He hit a sign and cement median.

Neither Overcash or Mary Adder, 16, of Delaware Water Gap, were hurt in the crash. Total damage was estimated at $150, police said.

Auto theft charged

STROUDSBURG — A Philadelphia man will face auto theft and misuse of registration plate charges during a July 21 preliminary hearing.

Bruce B. Harris, was arrested by Stroudsburg police on Friday, July 11, after he was caught going through a red traffic signal at the corner of Sarah and Sixth Streets.

When checking the car's registration, borough police discovered it had been stolen Feb. 25 from a Norristown man. Harris was arrested and arraigned before District Magistrate Earl Ammerman. He was remanded to the Monroe County Jail in lieu of $1,000 bail.

DWG to plug one more leak

DELAWARE WATER GAP — Borough officials expect to have the latest of their seemingly-endless water system problems licked by Saturday. That is when the replacement for a faulty float switch on the pump of the 22,000-gallon steel storage tank at the top of Dogwood Drive is supposed to arrive.

Council president John Jones said the float switch is supposed to turn off the pump to prevent the water storage tank from overflowing.

Since the switch hasn't been operating properly, Jones said neighbors notice the overflow from the tank and notify the borough. The pump is then shut off manually.

Borough maintenance supervisor William Snow said an engineer inspected the building and found the foundation was "in solid shape." He noted the building was on "solid ground."

"There is no immediate danger," Snow said. Mount Minsy Apartments is adjacent to the water tank building. Snow said after that there is a driveway and a house.

When the tank overflows, the switch is operated manually until the water level in the tank goes down, Snow said. "We try to catch it before it overflows."

Jones called the problem "an inconvenience." He said "The people next door notice it and notify us and we get it shut off in a few minutes."

Summary court hears eleven cases

STROUDSBURG — Eleven persons paid fines and five others were found not guilty on summary charges in Monroe County Court Wednesday before Judge James R. Marsh.

Persons found not guilty were: John Vashinski, Millville, speeding; Roy Howell, Kresgeville, speeding; Riley Beech, Stroudsburg, reckless driving; and Leonard Troy, Scranton, speeding. Charges of dangerous and unsafe conditions of a structure and a dwelling unfit for human habitation were dismissed against Bert Wasserman of Stroudsburg.

Saylors Lake, $141,999

SAYLORSBURG — Lake Pononoming, commonly known as Saylors Lake in Saylorsburg, was sold to Saylors Lake Enterprises Inc. Wednesday for $141,999, according to a deed filed in the Monroe County Courthouse.

Included in the sale is the 50-acre lake, pavilion and tavern. The property was sold by Helen and Witold Tilwick of Saylorsburg who had owned the lake since 1954.

The new owners are seven Philadelphia area businessmen who say they will maintain the beach and fishing privileges as in the past for the public.

They plan to provide family entertainment for teens and adults and feature country and western singers.

Blue Mountain-Slate Belt suspended by darkness

MOUNT BETHEL — Blue Mountain and Slate Belt beat the rain Wednesday night, but they didn't beat darkness.

The game between the two District 20 North Little League tournament entries was suspended by darkness entering the top of the eighth with the score tied 1-1. It will be picked up at that point at 6 p.m. tonight at the Slate Belt field.

A heavy downpour in the top of the fourth caused a rain delay of 57 minutes before play resumed.

Injured Merckx keeps pedaling

CHATEL, France (UPI) — Belgian hill-climbing specialist Lucien Van Impe took the Tour de France by surprise Wednesday by winning the 18th stage, a 25-mile race against the clock, while his injured countryman Eddy Merckx finished third to reduce Frenchman Bernard Thevenet's overall lead by 15 seconds.

Merckx, the 30-year-old defending champion and reigning world titleholder, raced with a fractured jaw, a perforated sinus and a painful hip injury as a result of Tuesday's crash involving himself and Denmark's Olle-Ritter which also left him with eight stitches in his left leg.

Merckx completed the lap, a time-trial from Morzine to this Alpine resort, in 1 hour, 4 minutes, 12 seconds and is now 3:03 behind the 27-year-old

The winner of the game will take on West End, a 5-2 victor Wednesday over East Stroudsburg, in a semi-final contest at 6 p.m. Friday at East Stroudsburg, Bangor, which beat Pocono-North Monday night, 4-1, and Stroudsburg, a 4-0 winner over Pocono-South Tuesday night, meet tonight at 6 p.m. at Stroudsburg in the first semi-final game.

Slate Belt scored its run in the third in a tainted manner on a passed ball and Blue Mountain scored another tainted run to tie it in the fifth on an overthrow to third following a single to right field.

With Curt DePue batting, catcher Kevin Flood committed one of his four passed balls in the game and Vanderpool just slid in ahead of Flood's diving tag attempt.

Blue Mountain tied it in the last of the fifth but it wasn't as involved.

Phil Racciatto walked with two out and headed for third as pinch-hitter Joe Gennusia singled through the hole between first and second. Rightfielder Vanderpool's throw to third sailed far over Glasgow's head and Racciatto scored easily.

Goffredo, who had a no-hit ter until Gennusia singled, ran his team out of a scoring opportunity in the top of the fifth. His blooper over first was good enough for an easy double, but he tried to stretch it into a triple and was cut down easily on a smooth relay, right field to second to third baseman Matt Pritchard.

EAST STROUDSBURG — John Matiskella was one of the smallest players on the field Wednesday night. In the clutch, he turned out to be the player who got the biggest outs.

Matiskella bailed starter Kevin Costenbader out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam and turned in three scoreless innings of relief as West End defeated East Stroudsburg, 5-2 in a District 20 North Area tournament game.

West End led by only 3-2 in the bottom of the fourth inning when East Stroudsburg used an infield bloop by Todd Toth, a fielder's choice bunt by Bob Hilbert, and a walk to Eric Byrd to load the bases against Costenbader with nobody out.

West End manager Bill Kresge called in Matiskella

A.L. owners vote to dump Bowie

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (UPI) — Bowie Kuhn's chances for reelection as baseball commissioner were dealt a blow Wednesday when the American League marshalled the necessary four negative votes to depose him.

Meeting in a separate session, the American League communicated its decision to terminate Kuhn's contract to National League officials meeting privately by themselves on the same hotel floor. But the National League attempted to get AL officials to hold off a formal vote on the ouster.

Four negative votes in either league are needed to fire a commissioner.

Oakland, Baltimore and Texas all went into the American League meeting firmly opposed to reelecting Kuhn and officials of those three teams finally convinced the New York Yankees to come over to their side.

A joint meeting between the two leagues was to follow the two separate meetings and it would be at this session that Kuhn's ouster would be announced. But the National League officials prevailed upon their American League counterparts to delay their vote temporarily, anyway, and that is where matters stood before the joint meeting was to start. Kuhn normally presides at the joint meeting.

Kuhn's most vocal adversary was Oakland owner Charlie Finley.

American League officials were glum-faced as they came out of their meeting room for an occasional recess and it was obvious they were under instructions to maintain complete silence to the press.

Kuhn's reelection was considered a foregone conclusion until Tuesday when Texas owner Brad Corbett swung over to the side of Finley and Baltimore owner Jerry Hoffberger.

Kuhn, remaining in his suite in another part of the hotel where the meetings were going on, was informed of the four American League votes against him.

The eight remaining American League clubs who wish to extend Kuhn's present contract were doing everything in their power to block a formal vote. The A's, Orioles, Rangers and Yankees, meanwhile, were attempting to win a fifth club over to their side.

American League officials finally broke up their meeting and went into joint session with the National League, whose officials kept trying to persuade the American Leaguers to hold off a formal vote which would oust Kuhn, at least until November's winter meetings in Hollywood, Fla.

Some of those American League officials in favor of extending Kuhn's contract told him they had done everything they possibly could in his behalf, but the situation seemed hopeless because the four opponents were adamant.

Kuhn was told they would do their best to delay a formal vote on his ouster, but the commissioner, in turn, told them he wanted the matter resolved, one way or the other, today.

Meanwhile, in another development, Walter O'Malley, board chairman of the Los Angeles Dodgers, made an impassioned plea urging Kuhn's American League opponents to reconsider.

The entire scene was starkly reminiscent of the action taken during the December, 1968, meetings when the owners suddenly decided to fire the late Gen. William D. Eckert, who was unseated at that meeting and succeeded by Kuhn.

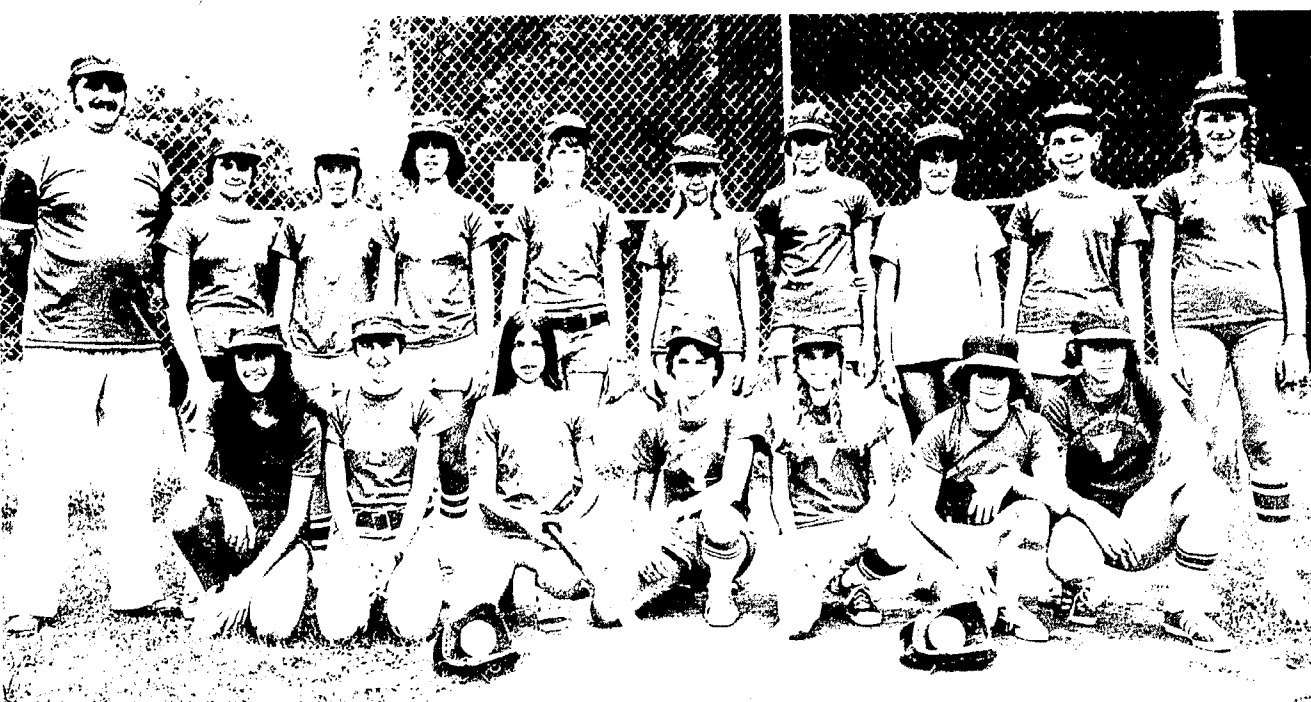

After six hours of talks the AL owners finally emerged and, in the words of American League President Lee MacPhail, they would reconvene this morning at 9 a.m. CDT when "a formal announcement will be made."

When asked if there was one particular topic discussed during the long meeting, MacPhail confirmed, "Yes, you could say that."

At an American League owners' meeting Wednesday, Finley was particularly critical of Kuhn.

"He hasn't got any guts," Finley told his fellow owners.

More than that, Brad Corbett, principal owner of the Rangers, called on Autry before dawn and spent more than two hours seeking his support to oust Kuhn.

Memphis will lose Sounds

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — The president of the Memphis Sounds confirmed Wednesday that, after five tumultuous years, the American Basketball Association is giving up on Memphis.

Mike Storen, who resigned as ABA commissioner in 1974 to take over the struggling Memphis franchise, said he had been told by the league office that the team likely will move to either Hartford, Conn., or Baltimore, Md.

Storen's statement came shortly after the current league commissioner, Dave DeBusschere, announced in New York that there would "definitely not be an ABA franchise operating in Memphis next season."

"The status of the team is still up in the air," DeBusschere said. "We have several options available and hopefully we will have an announcement by the end of the week."

Storen, who said he intends to begin working as an agent for sports figures, said the ABA officials "are negotiating with Baltimore and Hartford."

The ABA team that moved from New Orleans in 1970 and became known then as the Memphis Pros has never had a winning year on the court or at the box office. In the 1974-75 season, the Sounds finished 27-57 and lost four games to one to the Kentucky Colonels in the first round of the playoffs. Attendance averaged about 3,000 per game.

The franchise almost folded midway through its first year in Memphis, but a public corporation was formed to operate the team the remainder of that season and the second season.

In 1972, the franchise again was at the point of collapse. Sports magnate Charles O. Finley, owner of baseball's Oakland A's, then bought the team and operated it for two seasons.

Wednesday's announcement that the team would not remain in Memphis had been expected.

Says stick wasn't intended to be a weapon

Bruins' Forbes takes the stand

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (UPI) — Dave Forbes of the Boston Bruins testified Wednesday he may have had his hockey stick in his hand when he hit Henry Boucha of the Minnesota North Stars in a hockey game but he said he didn't intend to use it as a weapon.

He testified at his trial in Hennepin County District Court on charges of aggravated assault with a dangerous weapon. He was the third of three defense witnesses, and his attorney, Ron Meshbesh, then rested his case.

Attorneys are scheduled to give their closing arguments this morning and then the jury will decide the case—first U.S. trial of a hockey player for conduct in a game.

Forbes and Boucha got into a fight in the National Hockey League game here Jan. 4 and both were sent to the penalty box. The state charged Forbes threatened Boucha in the penalty box and then struck him with his stick, opening a gash over his right eye.

Forbes said he felt he had to retaliate after Boucha hit him from behind in their first scrap or Boucha would have thought "he could walk all over me."

Forbes said he couldn't recall exactly what he said in the penalty box because "I was so upset about the whole thing." Boucha had said Forbes threatened to shove his hockey stick down his throat.

When they came out of the penalty box, Forbes said, "I did yell, 'Okay, let's go.'"

"We continued skating," Forbes said. "When we did get close, he made a turning movement. I didn't know what was going to happen so I threw a punch at him."

"I can't be sure where it (the stick) was," he said. He added that he may have had the stick in his hand but didn't intend to use it as a weapon.

He said he didn't know at the time he was punching Boucha that Boucha was injured.

"I was just thinking about how to get as many punches in on Mr. Boucha as I could," he said. "I was solely intent on throwing punches. When I was pulled off, I did notice Mr. Boucha turn over and I saw blood on the ice. But I was unaware of how bad the injury was."

The Boston forward said he was under considerable stress at the time of the incident because "the game was the last of a disastrous road trip" and the Bruins were getting "very bad press" in Boston.

Forbes said the players also were under a lot of pressure from Coach Donald Cherry, who "got us to realize exactly the situation we were in—and it wasn't a good one."

Forbes said hockey players are "taught from very early days to stand up and defend" themselves. Unless a player acts aggressively on the ice, he said, "other players know that he will not pursue the puck" aggressively.

He said it wasn't unusual for players to "have words" in the penalty box. He said that happens about 95 per cent of the time but "the players understand the context in which the words are given."

JoAnne Carner favored to win Women's Open

NORTHFIELD, N.J. (UPI) — If everybody keeps their clothes on, this may be JoAnne Carner's year to win the U.S. Women's Open golf championship for the second time.

Mrs. Carner, the 1971 champion, most powerful player on the LPGA tour and its dominant figure the past 18 months, figures she has one coming to her after last year.

Then, coasting two strokes ahead with nine holes to go, she suddenly had her concentration interrupted.

"Along about 13 or 14, I hit two beautiful shots and had about a six-foot putt for a birdie," she recalled.

"All of a sudden some streakers went by. I missed the putt, I never got my concentration back, and I double bogeyed two of the next three holes."

That was just enough of a slip to drop Mrs. Carner into a fourth place tie, two strokes behind winner Sandra Haynie.

"I'll never forget that as long as I live," Mrs. Carner said Wednesday as she prepared for today's start of the Women's Open at Atlantic City Country Club. "I still can't figure out how they ever got in (without their clothes) — over two strands of barbed wire.

That must have hurt."

The streaking fad is a thing of the past now, however, and the long-hitting Mrs. Carner rates as the favorite in the field of 150 that will compete for a $55,000 purse.

Two years ago Mrs. Carner probably wouldn't have given a nickel for her chances here, dropping into a mystifying slump that saw her fail to earn a check in eight straight starts. But some work with Gardner Dickinson corrected matters. She won six tournaments last year while becoming the first woman golfer to approach $100,000 in winnings for a season and now she claims to be playing even better than then. She has won three of her last seven starts.

With nearly $50,000 in 1975 winnings, Mrs. Carner may make another run at the 100-grand mark before this season is over, although she's not too confident of reaching it.

"It can be done," she says, "but the hard thing really is the pressure you put on yourself to get to $100,000. I know I folded last year when I came close. I was going to sleep thinking about it."

Economist lashes out at NFL Rozelle Rule

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (UPI) — If the Rozelle rule maintains balance in the National Football League, football players should not be the only group restricted from moving freely from team-to-team under its provisions, a player-turned-economist said Wednesday.

Former Washington Redskins center George Burman said that coaches, team doctors and even stadium facilities are instrumental in a team's ability to win and should be included in efforts to "equalize" the league.

"Coaches, general managers, directors of player personnel — all these people do in fact have impact on the winning average of a team," said Burman, now an assistant professor of economics at Carnegie-Mellon University.

Burman testified in U.S. District Court as a rebuttal witness for 15 present and former NFL players who are seeking to have the Rozelle rule eliminated on the grounds that it interferes with players' freedom to change teams and holds down their salaries.

The NFL contends the rule maintains competitive balance by preventing wealthy or strong teams from getting all the best players.

25 enter Monticello Classic

MONTICELLO, N.Y. (UPI) — Super fillies Silk Stockings and Tarport Hap were in the field of 25 three-year-old pacing colts and fillies declared Wednesday for the July 27 running of the $300,000 Monticello classic, harness racing's richest race.

Silk Stockings has won seven straight races, posting track marks at Brandywine, Goshen and Yonkers en route. Her 1:58 half mile at Goshen was the fastest ever recorded at the historic 137-year-old track.

Tarport Hap, sold last month for $325,000, has won six of 11 starts this year, including a 1:59 1-5 at Brandywine.

Silk Stockings has a 6-5 edge over Tarport Hap in 11 career meetings. They are 1-1 for the year.

The only impact would be in increased players' salaries, improved working conditions and at most reduced profitability of these clubs," he said. "At most, who owns these clubs would be changed, but not that the Minnesota Viking franchise would stop playing here."

Defense witnesses, including NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, have testified that elimination of the Rozelle rule would cause cold-weather clubs such as the Vikings and Green Bay Packers to fold within five years.

TORTURE OR TRAINING? — Special exercise coach Dave McKinnis puts Redskin quarterback Joe Theisman (7) through a back exercise during workouts at Washington's training camp in Carlisle. (UPI)

Ann Landers

Crazy campers

Dear Ann Landers: Somebody in this group is crazy and I am asking your opinion. Which one is it?

Recently we were visiting a campsite. Mr. B discovered a snake under a board and ran away yelling language that is unprintable. Mr. T caught the snake (non-poisonous) and chased Mr. B for two country miles "just to scare him a little."

Mr. C watched all the action and Mr. T, who was holding the snake at arm's length, was laughing his head off!

Them Mr. C. walked up to Mr. T and said, "I have always been a follower of the Golden Rule. "Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you." Snakes bite people and I believe in getting even!"

With that, Mr. C bit the snake and I got sick to my stomach. Who is crazy?

Jackson, Miss.

Dear Jack: Mr. C is the leading candidate for the hatch, with Mr. T his possible roommate.

Dear Ann Landers: I want to know if it's normal for a wife to be upset when she finds $30 in her husband's billfold and he says he is saving the money to buy her a lovely birthday gift.

Then, when her birthday comes around, he shows up with a cake from the bakery and hollers, "Surprise!"

I took a part-time job and saved $90 for that jerk's birthday gift. When he hands me something that cost $11 — especially after lying about the money in his wallet — I feel that he is being selfish and unfair. Any advice?

Let Down Plenty

Dear L.D. Plenty: The next time The Last of the Big Spenders has a birthday show up with an $11 cake and holler, "Surprise!"

Dear Ann Landers: You've dealt with the problem on occasion, but please, Ann, say it again. Remind mothers who push their young daughters into boy-girl relationships by being too permissive that they are asking for trouble.

Mothers who permit daughters to go to visit boys when their parents aren't at home and allow them to sit after dark in parked cars are either foolish or they don't care what happens to them.

We have tried to raise our two teenage boys to respect womanhood. So far, I believe they have not stepped too far out of line. But I am bug-eyed when I see 13- and 14-year-old sextops hanging around our swimming pool in their mid-ribs and postage-stamp bikinis — belly-buttons showing, no bras and see-through blouses.

Today, most male high school students are more men than children. They can stand only so much "teasing" before they are compelled to cross that line. I'd like to say to the mothers of these girls, "I will be responsible for the morals of my sons, but I will NOT be responsible for what happens to your daughters."

Seen Plenty

Dear S.P.: You are SO right? I have printed letters with this message before, but it needs to be said again and again. Thanks for saying it.

Dear Ann Landers: I admit that even though I intended to be "brave," the radical mastectomy I experienced a year ago, with a good (thank God) pathology report, proved to be very traumatic.

I have since had a couple of benign tumors removed, and now my GP and surgeon are urging the removal of my remaining breast, as a preventive measure.

Other family deaths, illnesses and crises have made this an extremely difficult year. I am perplexed as to what my decision should be, and would be interested in the opinions of your medical experts on this controversial subject.

Very Truly Confused

Dear V.T.C.: My medical experts say, "Listen to YOUR medical experts." They know your case and my experts do not.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a secretary who conducts herself like a lady. For the one hundredth time, I have heard, "Thanks, Hon," or "Hold all calls, Dear," or "Sweetheart, please make five copies of that last letter."

This is supposed to be a business office. I'd like to tell my boss to cut out the affectionate and cutesy names, but unfortunately I don't have another job waiting. Besides, I have several years of seniority and one doesn't just walk out these days.

If you will print this letter in the paper I will put it on the bulletin board — where the clod can see it. —

A Woman With A Pronounceable Name

Dear Woman: Here's your letter, but I notice you didn't ask for an answer, so I won't give one. While I'm sure some secretaries in my reading audience feel as you do, I'll bet there are a greater number who attach little or no importance to those affectionate names which are more a habit than anything else.

Epidemic of accidents

More than 10,000 injuries have been reported in children and adolescents involving minibikes, bikes, motorcycles and electric go-carts.

The American Medical Association says that "The increased use of these vehicles by unlicensed and untrained drivers has led to a serious epidemic of accidents related to the operation of such vehicles."

A detailed study by Dr. John M. Specia and Dr. Henry R. Cowell, of the Alfred I. duPont Institute in Wilmington, Del., emphasizes that minibikes and motorcycles must come under strict supervision, licensing and instruction if the serious epidemic of injuries is to be reduced.

They suggest that vigorous laws be established to protect the safety of young people and to reduce the cases of permanent disability caused by accidents in these vehicles.

Newspaper stories of drownings of young, healthy, athletic and capable swimmers are reported frequently.

For years, these strange drownings of strong young adults have never been satisfactorily explained. Far too often they have been dismissed as the result of cramps, heart attacks or panic.

Now there is more than speculation about the causes of these bizarre accidents. Physiologists have been able to reproduce in laboratories some of the factors that are responsible.

Out of their complicated tests came an enlightening revelation. They concluded that there was real danger when the breath was held for an unusually long period under water.

I have a fatty growth on my arm. Can these ever become cancerous?

Miss E.E., S.C.

Dear Miss E.:

A fatty growth (lipoma) is a benign, noncancerous tumor. It is highly improbable that this type of tumor can ever become malignant.

Despite the fact that tumors are benign, they are kept under observation by doctors just to be doubly certain that tumors do not undergo what is known as "malignant degeneration."

Even though there is hardly any possibility that your tumor will become troublesome, it most certainly should be removed so that you can be spared unnecessary anxiety.

The operation is a simple one, and does not need more than 24 hours of hospitalization. The scar is insignificant. The value to your psyche will be great.

Won't kiss and ask

By Jean Adams

HOW?: (Q.) There is this boy Randy that I like but I don't know how to ask him to go with me. When we are alone he will hold my hand and he will kiss me but he will not ask me to go out with him. Please tell me how to ask him. —

First One in Pennsylvania

(A.) Don't ask Randy to go out with you. Do ask him to call you at home on the telephone or to visit you at home (when your mother or father will be there). If he calls or visits a few times he may ask you for a date or to be his girl friend. Then you can say yes.

SNEAK: (Q.) I don't have a problem. I would just like your opinion on something. During the summer three of my friends including me have someone sleep over. Then about 2:30 a.m. we sneak out and meet other kids and go to a field and get drunk. I would like to know what you think about this.

Don't say it might be dangerous, because half of us are always sober and take care of the others just in case something happens. —

Fun Lover in New York

(A.) I have to disagree with you. You DO have a problem. You have several problems.

In sneaking out you are not being fair to your parents or to the parents of your visitors. Both sets of parents assume you are safe in bed and are thus off guard.

In having parties in an unguarded field in the dark you are asking to be robbed or kidnapped or beaten up or worse. Even sober, you would be no match for a determined gang.

In getting drunk just for the sensation of it you are being foolish and flirting with alcoholism.

I think that what you are doing is awful, and that you should stop doing it.

UNFAIR: (Q.) I have a horrible problem with my little sister. My ma says my brother and I aren't allowed to hit her. But she takes advantage of us. She hits us all the time with brushes and toys and stuff. If we hit her back, Mom pounds us into the dirt. We don't think this is fair. What should we do?

Whomped in Wisconsin

(A.) If your sister is anything besides a baby, what she is doing IS unfair. Ask for a family meeting, with your father present, and talk it out. Ask for fairness for yourself and discipline for everyone involved.

Back to woodburn age?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — America was once a wood-burning nation. Then came the ages of coal and oil. But today, faced with the oil energy crisis, scientists are trying to turn the clock back.

The government's new blueprint for U.S. energy development envisions the creation of great plantations, on land and at sea, where trees or aquatic plants might be grown specifically for use as fuel.

By the turn of the century, it says, so-called "biomass" fuel might supply the energy equivalent of a million barrels of oil per day. The first pilot plants might be in operation by 1980.

Biomass means many things to many people.

To some it means the conversion of garbage into fuel that can be burned. Experiments already are under way in this field, with a number of cities turning wastes into low-grade substitute for coal. Wells drilled into some old landfills have tapped natural gas produced by the decay of garbage.

To others it means using trees for energy. A recent Stanford University study explored the possibility of turning eucalyptus trees, which require relatively little water and grow under a wide range of climatic conditions, to produce methanol liquid fuel.

Others are looking at the possibility of creating farms at sea with crops such as ocean kelp. The harvest would be converted into clean burning fuels or petrochemical substitutes.

Still others would do the same with agricultural wastes.

"Over 100 years ago we used wood primarily as our energy source," said Dr. John Teem, an assistant administrator of the Energy Research and Development Administration.

"In a sense we are trying to return to that, but with somewhat better efficiency. But there is much in the way of technology that needs to be developed to make that happen."

ERDA listed biomass in its 25-year research blueprint as one of the nation's potentially available but presently under-utilized energy sources.

It outlined a plan "to develop and demonstrate technologies for the production and conversion of terrestrial and marine biomass into clean fuels and petrochemical substitutes to make possible a moderate annual energy contribution by 2000."

The agency called for government programs to find more economical ways of using plants and agricultural wastes for fuel, improve growth and conversion processes and determine the technical feasibility of deep ocean kelp farming.

Meanwhile, it said, there also should be a government effort to solve such potential problems as land use conflicts and ocean rights.

Editor's report from China: Human sea of soldiers

Eugene Patterson, editor and president of the St. Petersburg Times, led a delegation of 15 American editors on a 4,350-mile reporting tour of China May 29-June 22. Following is another one of his reports which have appeared in the Times.

By EUGENE PATTERSON
Editor, St. Petersburg Times
Distributed by UPI

At China's Ta Ching oilfield in northwest Manchuria near the Russian border a squad of young women from an all-female oil extraction team fixed bayonets, flopped on the firing line and proceeded to drill targets 100 meters away with bullets from the standard Chinese 7.62 millimeter army rifle. The squad cook, a girl of 22, put five of her nine shots through a bullseye the size of your fist at this distance, longer than a football field, and her other four hit the nine-ring next to the bullseye.

At the Chilying farming commune north of Chengchow in central China a children's militia unit trotted out to fire the same rifle with similar effect. The youngest boy was 8. His rifle was taller than he.

On International Children's Day at Chungshan Park in Peking the favorite game on the midway for the 70,000 brightly dressed youngsters was shooting popguns at toy tanks trundling along sandbox roadways. Hits ignited a spew of flame from the tank turrets.

Green-uniformed Peoples Liberation Army soldiers are so much in evidence all over China that it looks like a nation in wartime. The PLA strength is placed at 2.9-million by U.S. estimates, an enormous financial drain on a primitive economy still largely based on coolie labor. This standing army is backed by an effective and constantly drilled militia, like those units at Ta Ching and Chilying, numbering in tens of millions.

This human sea of highly motivated foot soldiers has other support.

Our touring delegation of American editors counted 40 MIG fighters on a brand new airport at Chang Chun in Manchuria, a similar group on runways north of Harbin (though our Soviet Antonov airliner landed on the grass of Harbin's municipal field which has no runways), 40 more MIGs on the airport at Chengchow, and a dozen or so old straight-winged twin-engined jet bombers, perhaps Badgers, on the airfield at Kweilin in Kwangsi province where Gen. Claire Chennault's Flying Tigers once operated in the south. The Chinese, we heard, had copied and were building their own MIGs.

We were forbidden to take pictures from our cruise boat on the Whangpoo River more than 10 minutes out from the dock on Shanghai's Bund, perhaps because some 100 Chinese naval vessels were dispersed at berths along its length all the way to its junction with the Yangtze. The largest vessels seemed to be destroyers and gunboats, however. There were a few old tank and infantry landing craft. Most of the naval vessels were PT-type craft fitted with four blunt, upward-angled tubular structures on the rear decks which probably were rocket launchers.

U.S. intelligence believes Chinese medium-range nuclear missiles are in place and capable of striking every Soviet city east of the Urals but naturally we saw none of these emplacements.

We did visit the 12,000-man 179th PLA Infantry Division at its base southeast of Nanking and observed a thunderous firing exhibition of rifles, light and heavy machine guns, 82 millimeter mortars and 75 millimeter recoilless rifles, plus the explosion of water mines, 130 chain reaction land mines and a 500-grenade aerial detonation, all of the latter being designed to kill parachutists.

Not only is every commune in the Chinese countryside an armed camp but every major city in the country is burrowing a mole-like underground network of tunnels beneath its downtown area so that millions can pop under like field mice at the approach of danger. We saw enough fresh excavation in Harbin and other cities to be convinced the Chinese were not simply impressing us with a showpiece when they led us into a clothing store on Peking's downtown Tashila street, trundled back the floor behind a shirt counter and led us down steps into a nether world of interlinked, four-foot-wide tunnels that led five miles out to the suburbs. Occasionally there was a wide place designated as a dining hall or rest area. Ventilators and generators hummed as we tramped endlessly along the dimly lit underground corridors which were designed, we were told, with a dual purpose: to hide people, and to evacuate them to the outskirts.

They claimed they had marched 10,000 people down into this tunnel from the shops above it within five minutes in drills, but in an emergency one could imagine the deaths by trampling if numbers were rushed into such narrow tunnels. Nor could one believe such shallow tunnels could resist a nuclear blast, or such primitive ventilating systems filter out radiation.

One could comprehend the morale effect of having the tunnels in being, however. They are dug by volunteers who work in the shops above them as a patriotic exercise, on their own time before or after work, without pay. And they are dug by hand, a shovel-full at a time, under Chairman Mao's instruction (which would be a marvelous nonsequitur anywhere else) to "Store grain everywhere. Dig tunnels deep. Never seek hegemony."

Hegemony is the bad word in Chinese foreign affairs lately, and it is primarily aimed at the Soviet Union which the Soviets know, witness Moscow's continuing protest to Japan over inclusion of an anti-hegemony clause in its trade treaty with China. Ever since Russia invaded Czechoslovakia under the Brezhnev doctrine of limited sovereignty for socialist states, China has been belligerently determined not to have its sovereignty limited by Russia or anybody else. It also takes a very hard line on Taiwan: that the United States has no right to interfere in whatever it chooses internally to do about asserting control over that island which it claims as part of China.

Despite its enormous expenditure of time, money and propaganda on military preparedness, however, China conveys no sense of war fever. Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping twice stated in his interview with us that if the United States does not yet feel it can change its policy on sheltering Taiwan, China can wait. He and others minimized the Soviet threat on China's northern border, where a million Russian troops face a million and a half Chinese by American estimate. Russia's main thrust is occurring in Europe and the Middle East, Teng and others declared, and thus Russia was primarily the problem of America, which he saw relapsing into a defensive posture while the Soviets were taking an offensive stance. On this hegemony thing, did China disapprove of the U.S.-Japan mutual defense treaty, which many saw as a balancing or countervailing of Soviet power to strike China? Teng replied blandly that while China opposes in principle the establishment of military bases on foreign soil, China also believes in proceeding from reality and therefore believes it is necessary to recognize certain realities.

What if the Soviets did attack China, Teng was asked. Well, then, he smiled, China would have to set out a welcome mat for them.

There is no doubt the welcome mat would be spiky. "They might kill a lot of our people with nuclear weapons," another Chinese official said. "But they know they would have to follow up with tanks and infantry to enslave the survivors. And if they came into China with tanks and infantry they would be here 20 years, 30 years, and they would lose."

As for hegemony, there appeared at mid-1975 to be a fork in China's tongue, too.

Whether it wants Asian hegemony or not, it is proudly welcoming the rush of such falling dominoes as the Philippines and Thailand to Peking in the wake of the American debacle in Indochina. They think China is going to be the big fish in Asia regardless of Mao's dictum about hegemony and they are attaching themselves to the Chinese back. Moreover, the Chinese cannot expect intelligent people to ignore the blatant encouragement they have been extending overtly to the Communist parties which are seeking to overthrow the governments in Indonesia and Malaysia. For domestic consumption, though, hegemony is something bad nations practice.

As for going to war, however, China shows no aggressive intent despite the enormous war machine it has in being. On the contrary, there was the ring of truth in Teng's observation to us that while the Soviets were accusing the Chinese of trying to foment war, the Chinese need for a peaceful environment is greater than that felt by other nations, because only with a good international environment could China expect to catch up industrially with the Western countries.

And these people are coming from so far back, laboring so desperately with their hand to earn the machines to emancipate such an impoverished mass, that it really would be foolhardy for them to invite the nuclear blows that would wipe out their rudimentary industrial beginnings. If such blows came, of course, they could be absorbed in China's centuries. Only their timetable would be set back. This was the ludicrous fallacy of Gen. Curtis LeMay's desire to bomb Asians "back to the Stone Age." By Western comparison, they're still in the Stone Age.

Entering China is like going from New York's Upper East Side into the Appalachian world before The Waltons, from sophisticated glitter to a grinding gray poorness. But the grayness is lit by those ready smiles of an unbelievable mass where a sense of overwhelming strength arises from sheer number and united spirit. In a land of unarmed policemen their governance may be a mixture of cheerleader and press-ganger, evangelist and warden, the mezzings of their faith a million braying loud-speakers and the instrument of their full employment a make-work grind of manual labor. But the strength of their massed spirit is quite probably unconquerable so long as they hold together. At present the symbol of their power is their army which is so respected that millions of youth rush to apply and commanders select only the best, 18 to 22, pen them up on bases, cause them to till gardens and labor with peasants in addition to their military drills, and pay them $3 or $4 a month during a standard two-year hitch.

China report: Soldiers all over

"We have no rank," said Li-Yuan-hsi, deputy division commander of the 179th division at its base within sight of Nanking's Purple Mountain where Sun Yat-sen, the starter of the revolution in 1911, is entombed in the pagodaed splendor of an emperor.

Li's Mao cap with the red star and his green Mao jacket with red collar markings was distinguishable from a private's only because his jacket had four pockets. The enlisted men get two.

Li is slight, dark and wiry at 44 with graying hair and pale panther eyes. Like all of his officers down to company commander he is a Communist Party member, and like them he had a "political instructor" attached co-equally to his headquarters.

"Weapons are not the important thing in war," Li said. "The human factor is the important part — a knowledge of why we are using these weapons. If we know it's a just cause for the people, that's the decisive factor in combat. Chiang Kai-Shek had 'crack units.' We had the support of the people. A fish cannot live without water." (Playback of Mao sayings is omnipresent in China.) So is absorption with enemies as being internal. Li readily admitted he seldom reads the theories of military leaders of the past. He looks no farther than China and studies "the works of Marx, Engels and our Chairman."

Only a few yuan a month separate the pay of a platoon leader and a private, Li said, though he studiously refused to reveal his own wages. Had his troops been called out to put down Red Guards in the cultural revolution of the late 1960s? "In the past we have had people sent out to support the forces of the left," he said, employing a stock phrase that typically doesn't mean what it says. "They are back now on the base."

Did he ever have friction with his political "instructor," who was sitting in the room? "We are all under centralized leadership of the party committee," Li said.

Did he have artillery, tanks and air attached to his division? They were under Nanking's command. Did that lead to inter-service rivalry? "No, we are brothers," Li said. "The difficult tasks we do ourselves, the easy tasks we give to others."

How about morale? Are his thousands of young soldiers permitted to go to town? Li seemed surprised. "If they have anything to do in town, they can go," he said. "But soldiers don't like to leave their base. They know they are serving the people here."

We went out and saw a company of his hard, lean gunners triple-timing into the gumpits to fire their weapons, chanting all the way a loud cadence that was translated as, "Heighten our vigilance, defend our motherland!"

We toured the unit's museum, an inevitable appurtenance to commune, factory, oil field or army unit. Here, with romanticized clay statuary and Christmas card art, were pictures of heroic soldiers of the division beating Japanese to death with shovels and tunneling under the walls of Kuomintang-held cities to annihilate the clique of Chiang Kai-shek in the civil war.

It was a footnote on current foreign policy that Li drew me aside, as chairman of the American editors' delegation, before we entered the museum and said quietly, almost as a question, "Of course you know we were in Korea."

I replied that we understood, and would expect to see the division's Korean War exhibit.

It came near the end of the room-by-room display, and Li's military guide whipped us through it so quickly, with so little comment, that we barely saw the captured American carbine, the M-1 rifle, the bazooka, camera, bayonet and entrenching tool.

It was all very quick, discreet, restrained and hurried. We got only a rushed comment about the statuary showing two Chinese soldiers attacking a tank full of terrified Americans. "Both of our soldiers were killed," the guide said, and moved on. Only through our American translator did we learn later that one of the Chinese posters on the wall referred to the U.S. enemy in Korea as "running dogs."

But one of the editors wouldn't let the Chinese skip the Korean subject, and later asked the guide to elaborate. Li immediately moved forward to answer the question himself. "Our division was a participant in aiding Korea in resisting the war that the American government started, but which the American people were against," he said. "We make a sharp distinction between a government and a people, between those who make policy and those who do not. The Chinese people are very friendly to the American people. But at that time the flames of war were reaching to our own motherland. So we engaged in resisting the invasion of Korea and after the end we immediately pulled back to our country."

Had he and his division fought at the Chosin reservoir? No. Where had they fought. "In the eastern and central sectors," he said. He clearly did not wish to discuss the matter any further.

Later he drew me aside for another careful apology. "We never interfere in another country unless we feel our country is threatened," he said. "I want you to know we felt U.S. forces were approaching our borders. We both know the history of that period."

He seemed highly embarrassed. So was Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Voice of Broadway

NEW YORK — Songwriter Sammy Cahn heeded his mother's advice to keep moving and he has been going like 62 (mph, although that's his age, too) turning out more songs than we can list in our column, winning the Academy Award (4 times), Emmy, Christopher, etc., appearing on Broadway (lately in "Words and Music") and writing books ("I Should Care").

We talked with Sammy and got this spate, so you can see why he is never at a loss for words when there's music:

"It is four a.m., and before you go exclaiming, 'Isn't he early one?' let me explain. While I am an 'early one' four a.m. is even early for me. The truth of the matter is I have just returned from Paris. I'm waiting for 'jet lag' to catch up to me.

"I used to really marvel at our Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and his incredible ability for being able to handle 'jet lag' even more than I marveled over his incredible ability to handle Golda and Anwar. When his incredible diplomatic record started to fade and when I read all the theories, I chuckled then as I am chuckling now. The so-called political newsmen and newscasters blamed everything and everyone except 'jet lag'."

"My lovely bride and traveling companion Tita and I went to London on May the 9th to be present at the launching of my book, 'I Should Care,' at the W.H. Allen offices in Hill Street.

"When they insisted that I had to be present for the launching, I had a dim view of my hitting my book with a champagne bottle (even a split!). Well it isn't quite that kind of a launching. What it is is a cocktail party. Now I have been to many of these kind of parties, and if I had to vote for the place where the cocktail party is a way of life, meaning Washington, D.C. even Washington, D.C. doesn't quite come up to the style, booze and joie d'oeuvre of a literary launch in London. Apart from the literary crew and apart from the theatrical crew, apart from the visiting celebs, you never saw a marvelous room like 'Rags' (one of the swank supper clubs) reduced to tatters. (Rags to tatters, forgive me.)

"Having launched the book, and having greeted all the chums in London, I now unleashed myself on the media: TV, radio and paper and magazine people. It wasn't possible to turn a page, turn on the radio, or switch channels without running head on into me. When I ran out of time and space on the London scene, I flew to Dublin. I flew to Glasgow. I trained to Birmingham. I motored to Leeds to Liverpool to ... well you name it and I made it. The W.H. Allen people said not since Irving Mansfield and Jacqueline Susann had anyone ever done such a job. (This is to tell them, the truth of the matter is, I am really Irving Mansfield.)

"Now, I am first, last and always a songwriter. I may do one-man shows (watch for my national tour); I may do TV shots (watch for me with Tom Snyder on his 'Tomorrow' show); I may do a film now and again (watch for me in MGM's 'That's Entertainment, Too'); but I am first a songwriter.

"No matter where and no matter how, I will write songs. With all the running and with all the doing, I write my songs. (My mother said, 'Sam, if you lay still, they will throw dirt on you!') So I run and run, but I write.)

"The result of the writing, would you believe, was two (count 'em) two songs on the charts in England! Sammy Cahn at age 62 (count 'em), 62 with songs on the chart.

"There is a marvelous man in London name of Wally Ridley, who is EMI's record producer and a most talented composer. The day before I left for Paris, he called, and we wrote a song which he promises me will also be on the charts. If I know Ridley, it will.

"But the most exciting thing that happened in London happened at the offices of the Essex Music Co., subsidiary of Howie Richmond's, and managed by David Platz. I was called by Platz to meet Olav Wyper (that's the name, Olav Wyper). Olav turned out to be a marvel of a man, who asked me if I would be interested in doing a musical with music by Charles Aznavour, based on an incident in Aznavour's life. I loved the story idea and before you can say Olav Wyper (which isn't easy) my Tita and I were off to Paris to meet with the Aznavour people to discuss the notion.

"About Paris. All I can say is I once sat down at a coffee counter in Tokyo and asked for a cup of coffee. They brought the coffee and the check was (brace yourselves) a dollar and a half. Now I won't say Paris is more expensive but it costs you a dollar and a half to say hello to the garcon. (You cannot even contemplate what it would cost to say hello to maitre 'd'.)

"But apart from the excitement of the Aznavour meetings, the real fun was running into chums from N.Y. So what brought me back? A wire from Saul Chaplin and Gene Kelly saying I was needed at MGM brought me back.

"So then dear Jack, whatever you do, don't order coffee in Tokyo and or Paris, and keep moving; remember what my mother said, 'If you lay still they throw dirt on you!'"

Toll bridge crash ends auto chase

BLAIRSTOWN — A chase from New Jersey across the Delaware River into Pennsylvania resulted in the arrest of a Michigan man Sunday after a collision on the Delaware Water Gap Bridge.

Richard Heberstroh, 20, of Mylin, Michigan was allegedly driving a stolen vehicle west bound on U.S. 46, pursued by two state police cars at 11:40 a.m. He got onto I-80 and got as far as the Delaware Water Gap bridge.

According to police he jammed on his brakes, skidded and struck the metal barrier, then jumped it. Heberstroh struck an east-bound vehicle driven by Alfred Rehwinkel, 52, of Farmingdale, N.Y.

The east-bound vehicle spun around and jumped the barrier backwards, stopping when it struck a stopped state police car.

Rehwinkel and his wife Catherine were treated and released from the General Hospital of Monroe County. The state police car was damaged. Heberstroh was sent to Warren County Jail.

Ford challenges most power lobby

WASHINGTON (UPI) — With his proposal to crack the highway trust fund, President Ford has challenged one of the most powerful lobbies in America.

It's the highway lobby, a loose term which encompasses such interests as the truckers, highway builders, asphalt-cement industry, automobile industry, hundreds of motorists groups and insurance companies, construction labor unions and more.

The President has proposed breaking up the highway trust fund without reducing highway user taxes. That is tampering with the untouchable.

For two decades, some $5 to $6 billion a year in special highway use taxes have been flowing steadily into the special highway trust fund. Until recently, it was untouchable for any purpose except to build highways.

Priorities might change. There might be a greater need for materials of war, for schools, for services to the elderly, for rebuilding cities, or for mass transportation. But none of the highway money could be touched.

Finally, after a long and bitter fight in Congress, the lobby was dented to allow cities to use up to $800 million dollars a year from the fund for mass transportation planning and building, but not for operation.

Highway trust fund opponents didn't consider it much of a victory. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., among others, has proposed ending the fund now instead of in 1977 when it was supposed to run out. That would force highways to compete with all other needs for federal money and priority.

The Ford proposal, however, is quite different. He would have the fund continue indefinitely but at a reduced spending level. Into the fund would go only the proceeds from 1 cent a gallon gasoline tax, instead of the present 4 cents a gallon.

The fund also would get the proceeds of special user taxes on tires, truck and car equipment, and diesel fuel. The fund then would be limited to financing work on the interstate system.

Two cents of the present 4 cent tax would go into the general treasury. The final penny a gallon would be offered to the states, which theoretically could use the additional money for anything.

As a practical matter, most of it would have to be used for highways because 30 states have legal prohibitions against the use of highway taxes for any purposes except transportation.

The original concept was to build a modern network of highways which could move people and products quickly, safely and easily. It did that and more. It remade the face of America, contributing to the flight from the cities, the urban decay, the deterioration of the railroads, and the explosive growth of such allied industries as fast-food chains, motels, trailer camps, and tourist attractions.

Vast amounts of money have been spent by the fund. More than $50 billion on the interstate system alone; almost $80 billion on all highways.

There have been times when all the money couldn't be spent without harming the nation. Presidents Johnson, Nixon and Ford have impounded highway funds at times, but they couldn't touch the money for other urgent purposes.

The Highway Users Association, representing several hundred groups, already is organizing to oppose the Ford proposals. It charges that the Ford plan does not take inflation into account, and that if it is adopted the interstate system will never be completed.

It will be quite a fight to watch. The lobby is the odds-on favorite to win.

8 weeks to live, 8 weeks to die

MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — A dozen young adults were told they had eight weeks to live and they had to learn how to die.

They made wills, planned funerals and wrote their own eulogies, epitaphs and obituaries.

Each was told he or she had a "terminal illness."

"You lost 50 pounds. You are losing your memory," one of the patients, dying of a brain tumor, was told. "You're becoming more irritable."

The "dying dozen" actually were volunteers who agreed to simulate their own deaths in a program at the University of Minnesota YMCA.

"We felt if people could start understanding their own mortality and come to grips with it, it would enrich their lives and relationships with others," said Terry McKenzie-Mandel, a program director.

The program, which will continue this fall and next spring, is aimed at persons between 18 and 24, the second highest age group for fatalities.

"These are mostly people in school, in holding patterns in their lives, living for later," said Ms. McKenzie-Mandel. "Maybe it will help them take a closer look at who they are now."

The dozen volunteers went through the program entitled, "Eight Weeks to Live, Eight Weeks to Die."

"People we knew told us we had guts for trying it," said Ms. McKenzie-Mandel. "We were warned someone could go off the deep end."

Medical, law, mortuary science and seminary students at the university helped the dozen deal with every facet of dying. They were assigned illnesses and symptoms the first week, and every week afterward received a new card describing the progression of the disease.

"Not to be gruesome," Ms. McKenzie-Mandel said, "but just to give them something during the beginning weeks to simulate dying."

The group experienced emotions ranging from denial of death to acceptance of it.

The final session involved "killing them off," said Ms. McKenzie-Mandel. "It was an incredibly powerful experience."

"One woman said she was lying there watching herself get smaller. Finally she couldn't stand it and opened her eyes in a cold sweat," she said.

"Others cried, some were amazingly calm, for some it was awful," said Kristie Wayne, another YMCA official.

Pictures crayoned by the participants the first and final weeks reflected their changing attitudes toward dying.

"Most of them showed them holding death away in the beginning," Ms. McKenzie-Mandel said. "After the seminar, they seemed to step up closer to it. Some did manage to get a better attitude toward it."

One person drew a tidy graveyard, framed to keep it at a distance, and later drew a closeup of three flowers as if looking down at his own grave.

Marian Leonardson, the oldest member of the group at 30, drew a colorful circle with a black center and two figures outside.

"They were my husband and 5-week-old daughter," she said, "like I was completely cut off from people and those I love."

Eight weeks later Mrs. Leonardson again drew a circle, this time with a blank core and many figures inside.

"You don't really face death alone," she said. "There's others who can help you and not make it so awful. One thing I discovered was that the greatest satisfaction was in long-term relationships," she said.

Reactions in written evaluations were largely positive.

"I felt a lot of different feelings...feelings that made me feel alive — kind of ironic since we were dying," said Peter.

"I took and used more time for me," said Helen.

"I am important to some people," said Gail.

Even though the patients "died" in the end, the story had a happy ending. They learned more about living.

Communities pitch in to boost staggering economies

By PATRICIA FANNING
Dow Jones-Ottaway News

William Thompson, 48, was a chef without a restaurant. Out of work for nearly four months, he figured he would soon be on the road with his wife and baby, looking for a job.

But Thompson was spared the trek by a community project designed to put people to work. Dubbed LEAP, the acronym for Let's Employ A Person, it was conceived, promoted and paid for by business leaders in Colorado Springs, Colo. It is one of several ways that citizens around the country have tried to help their neighbors or customers combat hard times.

"I'd rather be in Colorado Springs than anywhere else in the country. But if it were not for LEAP, I wouldn't be here," says Thompson, who is now employed as executive chef of the Dublin Dinner Playhouse.

Collette Divine, Thompson's boss, says she and a co-owner hired a chef much sooner than planned. "We wanted to do what we could for LEAP. Early on, we had to use him for extra cleanup," she says.

LEAP encouraged businesses to scrutinize their operations, fill vacant positions, and add employees if possible. Homeowners were urged to employ workers to do deferred repairs or additions.

"The people of the community were psychologically down. We wanted to get people thinking that things are better, that there are jobs, that the world is not coming to an end," says Tom Watt, 37, LEAP's creator and vice president of a company selling supplies for home additions and repairs.

To put some zip in the jobs program, LEAP was set up as a lottery contest with prizes of $250. Entrants were required to have paid someone at least $50 for a job to be eligible for a drawing. The city's car dealers contributed $5,000, in prize money; Watt's company kicked in another $5,000 for administration and promotion, the publicity soon resulted in an informal list of job seekers who often were referred to employers.

LEAP recorded 2,537 jobs filled during the program, some the result of normal business expansion, only 148 were temporary.

"Things picked up. LEAP added a measure of confidence to the community we might not have had otherwise," says Don Ochs, vice president of a service-station company.

In Frederick County, Maryland, the Chamber of Commerce tackled unemployment by trying to save existing jobs. It suggested voluntary cutback of hours instead of people. With the cooperation of labor, more than half of the county's big employers revised worker schedules to avoid layoffs. Most employees gave up part of each workday, taking corresponding pay cuts. Since adoption of the program in late January, about 150 to 200 jobs have been saved, the chamber estimates.

Pat Gilstrap, supervisor of two McDonald's restaurants that employ 120 persons, says the Frederick program generated a long-lasting spirit of co-operation. "Someone could have said, 'Sorry, I want my 40 hours and I don't care about the rest of them.' But nobody did," he says.

In Norristown, Pa. a suburb of Philadelphia, a bank began a campaign to find work for unemployed customers who could not meet mortgage and other loan payments.

Noreen I. Lawless, 26, loan officer of the suburban bank, found that 10 per cent of the customers were defaulting. Moved by their loss of esteem and fears of foreclosure, she begged businesses for temporary jobs. Several companies used workers at night to paint factories that usually aren't painted until the midsummer.

Working overtime during an eight week effort, Lawless found work for 57 customers. "I wasn't doing it just to get loan payments," she says. "It was for morale if nothing else. But some people thought I was real crazy to get involved."

When red tape threatened to make hard times worse, volunteers took action in two communities. In Greenville, S.C., paperwork backed up when unemployment soared from 2 per cent to 12 per cent. "A lot of jobless people were waiting weeks, sometimes months, before unemployment checks could be cleared," says Arnold Arrowood of the Chamber of Commerce.

To help the state catch up, local businesses loaned office space, supervisors, and computer personnel to work with some 50 volunteers. During a five-week period, volunteers collated and filed the backlog of 12,500 forms, as part of an effort to eliminate lines of benefit seekers, the crew also prepared several thousand packets to help people apply through the mail.

Russian cosmodrome still expanding

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Russia's Baikonur cosmodrome in the middle of the central Asian desert is an immense secret base that appears three to four times larger than America's Cape Canaveral spaceport.

American astronauts preparing for the joint Apollo-Soyuz spaceflight flew in and out of the launch site at night from Moscow 1,300 miles to the northwest. They had to leave cameras behind but they saw enough during their rigidly restricted tour to be impressed.

"We could see this rolling desert," said astronaut Eugene A. Cernan, technical adviser for the joint mission. "It's sort of like West Texas or New Mexico, not with any mountains in the background, but rolling horizons. Not stark desert, but the kind of sage brush-West Texas type of desert."

"You could see railroad tracks, roads and big power lines —the walking giants, we sometimes call them —out over the horizon," Cernan said in an interview.

"Maybe you could see a building out there but you knew there was some kind of launch complex that had something to do with something else, maybe their military program, maybe another civilian program they're working on in terms of manned spaceflight, maybe part of their unmanned communications program, but you knew there was something out there."

Cernan said it appeared that the launch pads were spread out 30 to 40 miles apart, apparently for safety reasons.

In contrast to Cape Canaveral, the Russian base seemed to be expanding.

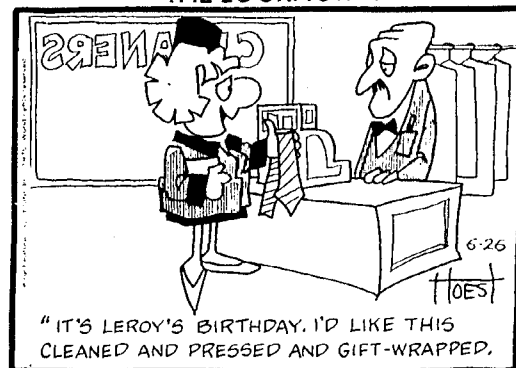

"It is definitely a forward going program," said Thomas P. Stafford, commander of the Apollo that will rendezvous with the Soviet Soyuz to be launched from Baikonur. "They are not slowing down one bit."

Although it is called Baikonur, the base actually is more than 100 miles from the city of Baikonur. It is close to the town of Tyuratam in the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic. When the Americans visited the center, they were told the modern city supporting it was named "Leninsk" although such a place does not appear on Western maps.

"It's a typical new type Russian city," Vance D. Brand said of Leninsk, "which means it has a lot of apartment buildings, it has a square, it has a couple of main boulevards."

Your Horoscope

Frances Drake

ARIES (March 21 to April 20) — This day needs team players as well as individualists. To know when to follow which line is up to your keen discretion. A bit of thought will help you decide.

TAURUS (April 21 to May 21) — You may be well ahead of those about you, but the direct thing will be to play it down, achieve without asking for plaudits. Be careful about violating confidences.

GEMINI (May 22 to June 21) — You may find yourself in the midst of controversy. Don't let it stymie your efforts. Rather, get together with opponents and use your fine gifts of mediation to resolve issues.

CANCER (June 22 to July 23) — Associates and co-workers may not all be heading in the same direction or for the same reason. Think well before joining any side but, once decided, don't waver.

LEO (July 24 to August 23) — You function best under pressure, but don't go looking for windmills to conquer. Make time for relaxation, the quest for inner peace.

VIRGO (August 24 to September 23) — You will need a good sense of perspective to cope with this day's intricacies and complexities. Your innate good judgment should help you to cope, however.

LIBRA (September 24 to October 23) — Endeavors of the past should bring reward now. Keep up the good work and your future will be even brighter.

SCORPIO (October 24 to November 23) — Do not become so deeply involved in the affairs of others that you invite fatigue, distress. An excellent performance now possible if you concentrate on your OWN goals.

SAGITTARIUS (November 23 to Dec. 21) — In a tight or unexpected situation, remain at ease, think things out; don't rush in without full data or know-how.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 20) — Take care of all essentials assiduously, with the primary factors thoroughly understood. Fine aspects encourage bright beginnings, sustained effort.

AQUARIUS (January 21 to February 19) — Improving conditions, but some areas need more patience, stronger effort, your special talents qualify you to reap benefits.

PISCES (February 20 to March 20) — You may not accomplish all that you wish, but you will attain many things — through an unflinching spirit of enterprise, plus self-discipline. Avoid hasty decisions.

YOU BORN TODAY are somewhat inconsistent by nature. On the one hand, you are studious and intellectually inclined. On the other, you have a great interest in monetary affairs and could become a skillful financier — in which case you may put your scholarly aptitudes and interests aside. You are highly energetic, and would make an excellent organizer, or business executive.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♦	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass

It is undeniable that many hands played in the annual world championship never see the light of day because the two teams that play the hand achieve the same outcome. Rightly or wrongly, a standoff on a particular deal is not generally considered exciting news, and hence the deal is apt to be forgotten as time marches on.

But some of these hands are unquestionably worthy of note, even though no blood was spilt. Here is one played by Canada and Holland in the 1968 World Bridge Olympiad. The bidding went as shown when Kreyens and Slavenburg were North-South for Holland at the first table. The well-known Dutch pair are excellent bidders and wind up in the best contract in the great majority of deals, but obviously something went wrong here when they contracted for six spades missing the A-K of diamonds.

When Kehela and Murray held the North-South cards for Canada at the second table, they also got to six spades! The bidding went:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♦	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♦	Pass
5 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass

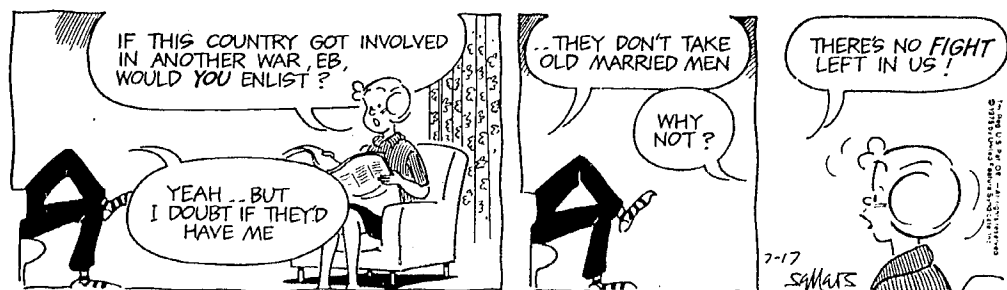

It is clear that, at both tables, either one or both players neglected to take their diamond holding into consideration and, with two diamond losers, barged merrily into a slam.

However, the story had a happy ending. At both tables West was on lead, and at both tables West led the jack of hearts. Neither declarer then had the slightest difficulty making six spades for a score of 980 points.

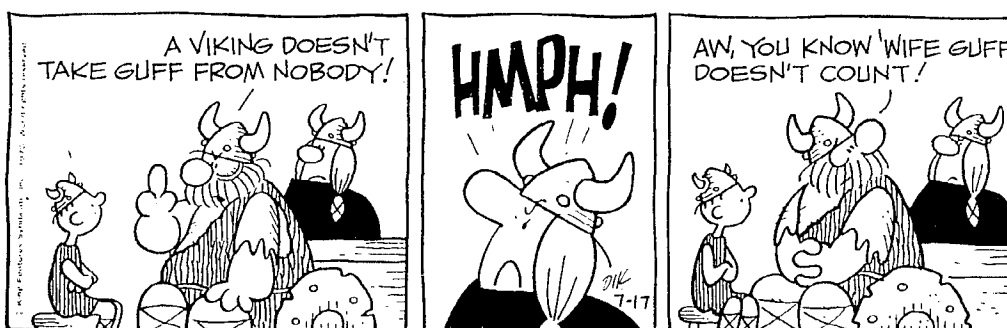

Call it ESP, or anything you like, but the fact is that both pairs bid and made six spades and the deal was a washout.

Some orthodontists think so

Cure buck teeth with a trumpet?

By DORI JONES

Dow Jones Offaway News

If a child who plays the clarinet went to New York orthodontist Ernest Herman with buckteeth, Dr. Herman might recommend that the youngster drop his instrument and take up the trumpet.

Playing the trumpet, Herman says, will force the child to thrust his or her lower jaw forward, aligning the teeth into a more correct bite. The instruments' pressure against the front teeth can push them back, helping to straighten them, Dr. Herman says.

Other dentists disagree, saying that with regular orthodontic treatment and proper musical instruction, playing an instrument will neither aggravate nor improve typical dental-misalignment problems.

Yet all dentists who have studied the relationship of teeth to musical instruments, particularly wind instruments, agree that the general health of the mouth is affected by these instruments, and that present as well as would-be musicians should have regular dental check-ups.

For example, the weight of a clarinet or a saxophone resting on the lower lip can cause gum problems or changes in the jawbone. Those who play wind instruments, especially brass and double-reed instruments such as the oboe, and must control tightly the muscles around their mouth, actually may be improving the muscle tone of their face and lips. Children with braces often need extra help and understanding when trying to adjust to a musical instrument.

Can the pressure of the instrument against the mouth actually move the teeth? A person with an excessive overbite, commonly known as buckteeth, should not play the clarinet, some maintain, because the pressure of the instrument against his upper front teeth will either push them farther out or hinder orthodontic attempts to push them back.

That person theoretically would benefit from the trumpet or other brass instruments, since they press the lips and teeth back.

Likewise, a person with protruding lower teeth and an accompanying short upper lip should play the flute or the clarinet (or instruments with similar mouthpieces) to bring his upper jaw and lip forward and to press his lower front teeth back, these observers say.

"I personally hate to see a child told to give up an instrument he's been playing for years just because of orthodontic treatment," says Dr. Daniel Balbach, an Ann Arbor, Mich., orthodontist.

Dr. Balbach says that normal wind-instrument playing does not have an effect on the position of a player's teeth. "For many instruments, the problem is more a question of incorrect embouchure rather than the instrument always putting pressure on the teeth," he says.

Herman's argument that instrument playing can move teeth is based on a 1965 study in which a sensitive device was placed in the mouths of subjects to measure the pressure that the instruments exert against the teeth. The study found that a trumpet pushes as much as 1.5 pounds of pressure against the front teeth.

Reed instruments and flutes push the teeth with about half this amount of pressure, a little less than that caused by thumbsucking, an acknowledged cause of buckteeth, Dr. Herman points out that a set of braces can move teeth by exerting only four to five ounces of pressure.

An editorial in an orthodontists' journal last fall noted that for a child with buckteeth to be affected by playing an instrument, "the child would have to practice at least eight hours a day or have a weak facial bone structure."

Dr. Herman says he has seen the condition of patients with buckteeth improved merely by playing the trumpet. "It's amazing," he says. "But you cannot say that every case of buckteeth will be benefited by the trumpet. It depends on the individual's mouth formation."

Dr. Balbach says that a child forced to play a certain instrument in order to improve his teeth will be faced with frustration and possibly failure since the mouth position will be especially tiring for him. Dr. Herman, on the other hand, believes that a child is "dentally suited" to an instrument if it will improve his tooth formation.

Both orthodontists agree, however, that children with severe dental problems should not play a wind instrument.

Insurance deadline August 1

PHILADELPHIA — The Veterans Administration urges 2.7 million veterans discharged between April 3, 1970, and Aug. 1, 1974, to apply by midnight August 1 if they want low-cost Veterans Group Life Insurance (VGLI).

Former servicemen separated from military service during that period became eligible during that limited time for VGLI authorized under the Veterans Insurance Act of 1974, VA explained.

The insurance is designed to assist veterans through readjustment periods, and it may be carried for five years only.

VGLI is available in increments of $5,000 up to a maximum of $20,000. Premiums for maximum coverage are $3.40 monthly for veterans aged 34 and under, and $6.80 for those 35 and over. To be eligible, the veteran must be in good health, except for service-connected disabilities.

For persons who convert their Servicemen's Group Life Insurance to VGLI within 120 days of leaving service, no health information is required, but those who wait beyond the 120-day period and yet apply within the following year must present evidence of good health except for service-connected disabilities. Application forms for VGLI are available from VA offices and veteran service organizations.

Completed applications and first month premiums for those separated before Aug. 1, 1974, must be submitted before midnight Aug. 1, 1975 to: Office of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, 212 Washington St., Newark, N.J. 07102.

Oak still stands

In 1836 a Creek Indian medicine man of the Lochapoka band spread ashes gathered from the tribal council fire in Alabama under a great oak tree on the edge of the Arkansas River in Indian Territory. The accompanying ceremony completed the tribe's move to the new land, and the Indian village of Tulsey was born. Today the old Council Oak still stands in the shadow of a 32-story skyscraper on the edge of downtown Tulsa.
